

Lola Suggests 2 Recipes for Preparing Fish

Pickled Style Is Served
Cold, Other Brought to Table Hot.

BY LOLA WYMAN

Here are two fish recipes for hot weather serving. One's a hot dish, the other cold. Recently I was presented with a beautiful piece of Columbia River salmon. It was an exceedingly hot night. What to do with it and yet serve it cold?

I pickled it this way (of course any other fish, haddock, halibut, etc., may be prepared the same way). This method of pickling fish is very easy and quick. It may be served either hot or cold.

Cold Pickled Fish for 4

- 4 small fish steaks
- 1 pint vinegar
- 1 pint water
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon ground allspice
- 5 bay leaves
- 4 slices lemon
- 5 whole onions sliced

Boil the vinegar, water and all spices (except lemon) for about 25 minutes.

Add the lemon slices and cook five minutes, then remove them.

Now add the fish and let it simmer in this liquid about 10 minutes at the most. You can tell when it's cooked. The fish must hold its shape, too.

If you serve the dish cold, place the fish steaks in a pottery bowl or crock and pour the brine over it. Cover the bowl, let get very cold in the refrigerator and serve with the onions poured over the fish on lettuce.

If you serve it hot, remove it from the brine entirely and serve on a platter with mayonnaise and lemon wedges and a sprinkle of chopped parsley on the fish.

White Fish Loaf for Four

(To be served hot)

- 1½ pounds halibut, haddock or any white fish.
- 1 teaspoon pickle spice.
- 1 cup soft bread crumbs
- ¼ cup milk.
- Grated rind of ¼ lemon.
- 1½ teaspoons salt.
- ¼ teaspoon pepper.
- 1 teaspoon melted butter.
- 2 eggs.

Place the fish and the pickle spice in a small kettle. Add the first teaspoon of salt; cover with boiling water and boil gently until tender, about 15 minutes or longer.

Lift the fish from the liquid, cool. Remove skin and bones; flake the fish fine with a fork.

Cook the bread crumbs and milk together to form a paste, add to the fish with seasonings and butter. Separate the eggs, add the unbeaten yolks to the fish mixture and fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites last. Pack into a well-greased brick-shaped pan, the bottom of which is lined with paper. Place in a panful of water and bake in a moderately hot (375) oven from 45 to 50 minutes or until the loaf is firm on top. Let stand 2 or 3 minutes before unloading.

Serve hot with parsley and egg sauce and a garnish of parsley and lemon quarters.

Etiquette

By PATRICIA

FORMAL INVITATIONS—Formal invitations always are written in the third person. The salutation and inside address are omitted, and the addresses and date are put at the end. The present tense always is used in both the invitation and the reply. The reply to a formal invitation is always in the same style as that of the invitation. The following are examples of correct forms:

FORMAL DANCE INVITATION
Mr. and Mrs. John Carter request the pleasure of your company at a costume dance to be given at their home on Thursday evening, August the tenth, at ten o'clock.

146 Blank Street

The acceptance and refusal should be written in the same form. The former reads: "Mr. and Mrs. William Howard accept with pleasure Mr. and Mrs. John Carter's kind invitation to be present for dancing on Thursday evening, August the tenth at ten o'clock." The latter reads: "Mr. and Mrs. William Howard regret exceedingly that they are unable to accept, etc."

IF the old family tea set survived Depression Days and wasn't melted down, now is the time to bring it to the fore! Sterling and plated silver, which gave way to chromium and pewter during the "evil days," are coming into their own again. A revival of formality in dining has brought back fancy silver designs.

Your table silver should reflect the period of your dining room furniture. People who can afford it are copying their silver from their antiques.

There are two schools of thought on the subject. One favors the ornate patterns inspired by the Italian and French Renaissance. The other prefers the less elaborate type which had its origin in early American and Eighteenth Century. Some of the silver popular now was inspired by rose point lace, some by old pine tree shillings used by the Massachusetts colonists in 1652. From England comes a reproduction of a famous Sheffield design.

UPPER photographs (1 and 2) show a tea ensemble in Colonial patterns. The marmalade set (1) is of sea green china in a silver tray with silver spoons to match. The toast rack is near by and the fluted receptacle which resembles a shell made in silver may be used for cigarettes or bon bons. The three-piece tea set (2) with hand-decorated tray is delicate and graceful in design and a rare value from a local shop.

With John and Mary's wedding coming along so soon... it might be a tip to take seriously if you're not in the silver-buying mood for yourself just now.

The lower photograph (3) shows a sterling fish bowl and spoon, in the old Vincennes pattern. The "muffins" of English plate for powdered sugar is an attractive addition to any table.

There are scores of smart new pieces in silver being shown now. Almost any dish that you can get china is available in silver. Cracker and cheese plates, with glass linings, revolving silver servers, centerpiece vases, sandwich trays and salad platters.

Mr. and Mrs. Raphael Kaufman announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Celia Kaufman, to Julius Zukerman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Zukerman. The wedding is to take place Aug. 9.

WEST had one of those hands which arouse hope of defeating the adverse contract as soon as the dummy goes down.

Today's hand was played at South tricks and another that looked fairly certain, but in bridge you never can tell whether a "sure" trick in the hand will be there when the cards are played.

Dusty Hat Atop Perfect Coiffure Rouses Criticism

BY ALICIA HART

Time Special
"It annoys me to see a dingy, dusty hat atop a perfect finger wave. If a girl has time to go to a beauty shop fairly often and is careful about making up her face, why in the world can't she spend an extra 30 seconds brushing her hat?"

These are the very words with which one of our male editors greeted me this morning. Seems he saw a dusty white felt hat in the elevator, and he apparently thinks the time is ripe for another lecture on the importance of neatness and being perfectly groomed from head to foot. Anyway, the fact that a man prompted this discussion should give women food for thought.

Every one who wants to look meticulously turned out ought to realize that a hat brush, a clothes brush and a cloth for wiping dust off shoes are just as necessary to this and as a hairbrush, a powder puff or a good lipstick.

You simply can't look your best if your dress needs pressing, or if your hat, shoes and gloves are soiled even a trifle. Expensive they may be, but the cost of your wardrobe has nothing to do with the neatness of it, but tidy and clean they must be. A $10 dress, perfectly pressed and set off with spic and span, white collar and cuffs, looks a thousand times better than an $85 one that should be at the cleaners'.

Remember, too, that especially in summertime, hats and shoes should be aired inside and out occasionally. Use a bit of cleaning fluid to freshen up inside hat bands. Always put shoe trees in your slippers and don't forget about wiping them carefully.

Also, keep an eye on the leather linings of your shoes. It's a mistake to wear them a single hour after they begin to look run-down.

Try Diverting Interest, Energy, Is Jane's Suggestion to Girl, 17, Who Has Been Defeated in Love

Wound to Self-Esteem Probably Mistakenly
Interpreted as True Affection,
Jordan Replies to Reader.

Jane Jordan will study your problems for you and answer your letters in this column daily.

DEAR JANE JORDAN—I met a boy last summer and went with him steady for about two months. Then he came once a week for a while and finally quit coming. I looked forward to seeing him again this summer and did a few times. I had a couple of dates with him and he said he would drop around again but never did. It has been two months since I have seen him. I think every night he will come.

Although I am going steady with another boy I can't forget the first one. I saw him with another girl and almost fainted. I just couldn't get over it. I think of him every day and dream of him almost every night. Everywhere I go I see somebody who looks like him or something that reminds me of him. When I'm with other boys I always think of him. Why can't I forget him?

He is in his middle twenties and I am 17. My steady is 21 and I don't really care for him. I just go with him to have somebody to go with. If I keep going with him will I learn to like him? Why can't I forget the first boy? QUESTION.

ANSWER—You have met with your first defeat and do not like it. The fact that you weren't able to make a complete conquest of the first boy who attracted you has cut into your self-esteem. It is your pride which is tearing you to pieces more than actual love for the boy. At 17 a girl is more in love with the idea of loving than with an actual person. You've hung your dreams on a young man who probably bears no slightest resemblance to the image you cherish. Really close acquaintance with him might break the grip of the infatuation from which you suffer.

It is a bad idea to become so obsessed with another person that it interferes with your ability to enjoy life. Resolute application to other interests will gradually crowd out your disappointment. You are on the right track when you go out with another boy whether you are madly in love with him or not. It gives you less time to weave impossible fantasies about another.

For one thing, the boy you want is too old for you. If the girl who replaced you is closer to his own age you can comfort yourself with the thought that it was your youth that defeated you rather than any lack of charm.

Do you like to read books? Perhaps it would help you forget your own experience to consider the experience of others for a while. You would learn a lot from the reading of Galsworthy's "Forsyte Saga." The story of Fleur Forsyte, which begins about the middle of the series, unfolds the story of another girl who failed to assimilate her first defeat in love and the havoc it brought to her life. Read it and avoid a similar mistake.

Woman's Novelty Pumpkin for Party Starts Her in Business

Times Special

NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—Twenty-five years ago Josephine Shackman made the first novelty pumpkin for Halloween parties. A seemingly innocent diversion, and no great shakes as a discovery, either, except that nobody thought of it before commercially. But its repercussions were tremendous.

It started Mrs. Shackman off on a career. Today she rates as a trick-and-treat gadget inventor whose feats would bring Joe Cook to blush.

Although her husband's firm handles "em, she doesn't go in much for explosive seggars, nose-shattering vigarets, phony ink-blots and rubber hot dogs that are the life of any Queens Village Saturday church supper. But she has specialized on what she calls "Joke-bobs," which are near enough.

Her doodads in this class are limited. She is the box "Why Blondes Are Successful." Open it and find a bottle of peroxide. A scream. Another is labeled—"Be True to Them or They'll Be False to You." About the size of this one. A million laffs. Another, "For That Dirty Look." Guess? Nope. A cake of soap. Some fun.

Idea Just Come
A good seller is Mrs. Shackman's "The Matrimonial" gadget registers every degree of conubial emotion from a kitchen's bride's coy reaction to the violent 12-month-later rolling-pin fury.

"The ideas just come to you," explained Mrs. Shackman. "Take my miniature watering can. It had been a slow seller so I created a joke-box use for it. Contemporary items, mostly new, influence me. For example, after the Dionne quins were born I got up a tiny go-cart with five tiny babies in it, also a tiny bed with five little babies.

"One of my oldest creations are our snow babies, little white kids used for Christmas tree decorations. I made these after the report was published that Dr. Cook had discovered the North Pole.

Husband No Idler
"We are selling now small greyhound dogs, an idea that arises from the interest in dog racing. Some of our models have little numbers on their blankets."

Mont Shackman, her husband, is no mental idler, either. Although mostly aided by his wife, often Mr. Shackman cooks up things all by himself. Moreover, he, too, is influenced by the contemporary scene. Two novelties, currently popular, are his brain children—a glass elephant labeled "Square Deal," and a glass donkey labeled "New Deal."

The Shackman concern, more than 30 years old, is one of the largest dealers in—and creators of—novelties and gadgets in America. It's an intricate business. Most of the things are so tiny they require special handling and one's memory must be prodigious not only to remember the price but where the deuce the darn things are.

Duty Just Increased

The duty on toys, Mrs. Shackman moans, has just been increased 45 per cent, and to make matters worse the customs officials can't seem to make up their minds as to just what is a toy.

"Many of our dogs, especially the miniatures, are used simply as decorative handlings and one's memory must be prodigious not only to remember the price but where the deuce the darn things are."

The bride is a graduate of Indiana University, where she was a member of Alpha Delta Pi, Theta Sigma Phi, Pi Lambda Theta and Mortar Board. Mr. Sieber is Carroll County Republican chairman.
