

JURY OFFICIAL DEFIES JUDGE, REFUSES OATH

Edgerton Claims He Is Under Jurisdiction of Circuit Court.

want an hour or two to consider this.

"You have only two courses. You may either take the oath, or resign."

"I am willing to do either," Commissioner Edgerton said. "It's a matter of jurisdiction."

To others in the courtroom he said: "It is my understanding that I am directly responsible to Circuit Court."

"I want to preserve the dignity of my office," Judge Baker called us in here this morning with no warning and no time to consider the legal aspects. I don't think the jury commissioners are under every court in the Courthouse. Judge Baker is trying to put me on the spot."

The administration of the oath came up when Clyde Karrer, judge pro tem, of Criminal Court, ruled that the oaths of office of the commissioners must be matters of record if they are to draw legal venues.

Judge Baker said there are two ways for him to secure juries. He can order the sheriff to pick up a bystander petit jury, and he can order the commissioners to pick a grand jury, he said.

"But for the time being, I'm going to let it ride," he said.

Prosecutor Herbert Spencer said that if there are no juries by the time a jury trial is scheduled the program of his office will be considerably interrupted.

Issues Statement

Mr. Edgerton issued the following statement:

"I was called into Criminal Court by Judge Baker, who demanded that I take some additional oath regarding my duties as jury commissioner. I declined to take any oath in Criminal Court, but announced that I would take any legitimate oath required by law in the court of my appointment, which is the Circuit Court, and have advised Judge Cox of the Circuit Court of my willingness in that direction."

"When Judge Cox requests me to take an additional oath I shall be only too glad to do so. I know nothing about the legal matters which have to do with construction of the jury commissioners' act, but I feel that I am accountable to the judge of the Circuit Court and no other court."
