HOOSIER ROADS FAIL TO MEET NEEDS, REPORT

Survey of Restricted Load Zones Is Made by Commission.

The Indiana highway system is not adequate to meet the demands of motorists, J. T. Hallett, road engineer, said in a report filed today with the State Highway Commission.

The report was based on studies of the state highway mileage on which traffic was restricted to a three-ton load limit during the spring months and the highways which were damaged during the spring, due to failure of base.

Maps included with the report show these conditions present in all sections of the state.

During the spring months, 3966 miles of state highways were posted with the three-ton limit to protect the surface.

During the same period, approximately 1555 miles of highways were found to have inadequate base strength to carry the traffic, Mr. Hallett stated in his report. A majority of the highways having inadequate base strength were included in the group which had been posted.

"Funds for highway purposes should not be decreased below what they have been for the last several years," Mr. Hallett concluded, "and I believe it would be a measure of economy to the public if a greater amount of funds were made available, because inadequate highways cost more than adequate roads."
