

INDIANA TO PAY 42,000 OLD-AGE PENSIONS IN '37

County Budgets Provide for $9,093,165 to Assist Needy Persons.

Approximately 42,000 aged Hoosiers are to receive assistance in 1937, under provisions of the 1936 Welfare Act. Public Welfare Department officials estimated today. This will be an increase of more than 11,500 over the number receiving assistance at the close of 1935, officials said.

With about 20,000 dependent and neglected Indiana children in custody of relatives, who eventually are to receive assistance, an increase of about 15,000 over 1935 will be recorded in 1937, according to officials.

Estimated 1937 budgets of all counties combined provide for a total expenditure of $9,093,165 for old-age assistance, of which the Federal Government is to pay $4,773,911.63, or 52.5 per cent. The state is to pay $2,591,552.02, or 28.5 per cent, and the counties are to provide $1,727,701.35, or 19 per cent. Before passage of the Welfare Act, counties paid one-half of all old-age assistance granted, officials said.

Reconstructs Jay County Homestead in Miniature as Hobby

J. H. Lawson, 61-year-old steam shovel operator who has helped modernize most all of Indianapolis' streets and boulevards during his working days, has retired to his home on 71st-st in Ravenswood and this summer amused himself with a curious hobby.

He constructed in miniature the buildings and other landmarks of his homestead in Jay County, near Ridgeville, where his 91-year-old father still lives.

The upper picture shows a panorama of the miniature farm, and the lower a closeup of a model of the covered wagon that brought his father to Indiana. Even to the well and pump, the rail fences, the log house, Mr. Lawson has faithfully rebuilt his father's place on scale.

His handiwork has attracted many visitors.

LOCAL SYSTEM OF PARKS HELD NEAR TO IDEAL

Indianapolis ranks among the few cities of the United States that have park acreage near what is described as "ideal," according to figures compiled by Editorial Research Reports.

City planning experts contend that in order to approach a theoretical ideal, every city should have at least one acre of recreation space for every 100 residents and total acreage should comprise at least one-tenth of the city's area.

Indianapolis, with 26 parks totaling 2869.2 acres, has one acre for every 124 residents. Evansville, with 656.1 acres, was the only other city in the state mentioned as near the ideal class. It has an acre of park space for every 151 residents.

Walter H. Blucher, executive director of the American Society of Planning Officials, said:

"I do not know of any community in the United States that has too much park area. Hundreds of them have not enough."

Some cities are described as excellent examples of what a park system ought to be.

Chief among these are Denver, Colo., with one acre to every 23 persons, closely seconded by Joliet, Ill., one to 30; Fort Worth, Tex., one to 38; and Dallas, one to 42. Other cities that exceed the ideal are San Antonio, Spokane, Tulsa and Oklahoma City, Savannah, Ga., Pasadena, Cal., Wichita Falls, Tex., and Decatur, Ill.
