

Advices Wife She Must Avoid Mother Role if She Returns to Husband for Third Time

Good Working Agreement Is All You Can Expect From Patched-Up Marriage, Jane Jordan Says.

Jane Jordan will study your problems for you and answer your letters in this column each day.

DEAR JANE JORDAN—I have been married 10 years. At first John and I lived with my mother. During these four years John mistreated me terribly. When I would call him to get up for work he would punch and hit me. Because he would not get up for work he would either be late or lose his job. One night he packed up and went to stay at his parents' home. I went to court but could get no support. The court said he had to make a home for me. That he did. I was to select my own home. Instead he took his mother to select it.

In a few months life began where we left off with the same old thing. I would call him to go to work and receive punches. He was late most of the time and finally had a fight with the foreman and quit.

I went to the place where he worked and the foreman told me he was a problem to have working for him. I told him how we had just got our home; so he said to send John back in the morning. But he would not go back. We had to give up our apartment and separated again.

Now it has been five years since all this happened. One night I met my husband at his aunt's house and he asked me to go back with him. His aunt will give him the money to put up a home for me. He is waiting for me to let him know if I want to go back, but in these five years I have not had the same feeling for him as I once had. He told me he had learned a good lesson and that his mother was to blame from the beginning. He has a steady job in an iron foundry and gets a raise every six months. My parents think I should give him another chance. I believe it is a problem which only you can help with.

ANSWER—Even if I knew you and your husband well I could not foretell whether or not your third attempt to live together would be successful. It could be, of course, but it would require a change of attitude on your part as well as on his. This may surprise you, for at first glance it looks as though your husband was to blame for everything.

It is true that he behaved very badly but it is also true that you did not handle him very wisely. He himself says that his mother caused the trouble. This infers that she was a bossy sort of person with the will to rule. No doubt he attempts to boss your husband around his opposition from childhood on and made him resent any kind of direction.

Now when you nagged at him to get him up in the morning you identified yourself with his mother who must have had the same trouble with her son. He reacted toward you exactly as he reacted toward his punishing mother in childhood. He acted like a mule when the whip is applied too heavily. He balked. It was foolish, idiotic and childish, but a fact nevertheless.

If you go back to your husband, avoid the mother role. Let him rise or fall by his own efforts. Do not complain to his boss or do any of the things that a mother does in the attempt to control a willful child. Treat him as a man upon whom you rely. Do not drive him, no matter how right you are and how wrong he is. Allow your husband to make his own mistakes and learn that they are mistakes from the consequences they bring down on his head.

It is not necessary to be madly in love with a man to make a marriage work. In fact a romantic attitude towards one's husband is frequently a handicap because it involves ideals which the earthly man can not fulfill. A good working agreement is all you can expect from a patched up marriage. If you can be content with this you have a better chance to succeed.

JANE JORDAN.

Latest Fashions From Local Shops

BY MARJORIE BINFORD WOODS

Times Fashion Editor

FASHION trends don't grow on trees. Nor are they shaped by chance or accident. International events, exhibitions of art and the mood of the times are only a few contributing factors in their formation. With ravaged Spain so much in the spotlight it is only natural that a hat like the one above should come to light. It has all the earmarks of a Spanish caballero with its vivid gold and red laces trimming each side. Fashioned of black felt with a smart black belting band, it was inspired by Lilly Dache.

There is magic in the wearing of black this season. Gay accents of color give a focal point of interest to set off the denseness of its hue. It's been predicted as a "suit-automne," if the weather will permit, and toques like this one give perfect balance to tunic capes and peplum suit lines.

NAPOLEONIC tricornes, Directoire brims and visor styles are among the endless designs which have put in their appearance in felt, anellope, velvet and fur long with the conical, pyramid and parallelogram crowns.

With crowns running up and down the scale of height, it behooves the chic woman to select the silhouette that flatters her most.

Father Performs Wedding Rite for Son and Bride

Dr. W. F. Hollingsworth, Atlanta, Ga., officiated at the wedding of his son, James Franklin Hollingsworth, and Miss Frances B. Woolery, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Pierce Woolery, today in McKee Chapel, Tabernacle Presbyterian Church.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore her blue traveling costume suit, trimmed with gray kid caracul, with blue accessories and an orchid corsage. Mrs. Egbert Campbell, the bride's cousin, was matron of honor. She wore a gray costume suit with darker gray accessories and a gardenia corsage. Castex Hollingsworth, the bridegroom's brother, was best man.

Miss Lure Fessler, organist, played bridal music.

The couple left on a wedding trip to New York, the Carolinas and Virginia. After Nov. 1, Mr. and Mrs. Hollingsworth are to be at home at 3720 N. Pennsylvania-st.

Mrs. Hollingsworth is a Butler University graduate and member of Delta Delta Delta and Theta Sigma Phi sororities. Mr. Hollingsworth, University of Georgia graduate, is a member of Alpha Tau Omega and Sigma Delta Chi fraternities.

Ely Culbertson Praises Wife as Bridge Player

If Ely Culbertson, bridge expert, were playing a game with his life at stake, he would choose his wife for a partner.

"Mr. Culbertson is to lecture on 'The Asking Bid' at 10 a. m. and 8 p. m. Monday in the Wm. H. Block Co. Auditorium.

Mrs. Culbertson's response to her husband's compliment is: "There are only 20 great bridge players in the world, and they are all men."

"All men believe that they have some mysterious inner sense that guides them and all men cling to the idea that they naturally are good card players," he said. "Unfortunately, they are not."

V. S. McClellan and Miss Gentry to Wed Tonight

The marriage of Miss Alice Gentry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Blanchard W. Gentry, to Verne S. McClellan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alyson McClellan, Whiteland, is to be solemnized at 7:45 p. m. today at the Grace Methodist Church.

The Rev. Wallace C. Calvert is to officiate at an altar banked with palms and ferns and lighted by roses. Mrs. Gentry is to play bride music and accompany Walter Eskew, vocalist.

Ralph H. Gentry, brother of the bride, is to be best man. Henry Combs, John D. Hughes, William Hoffman and Harry Weaver are to usher.

The bride, to be given in marriage by her father, is to wear white lace and carry Killarney roses. Her only attendant, Miss Lela McClellan, is to wear royal blue lace with matching accessories and carry Souvenir roses. Mrs. Gentry is to appear in a white dress and Mrs. McClellan in a black dress. Both are to have gardenia corsages.

The bride attended Butler University. McClellan attended De Pauw University and was graduated from Indiana University Law School. He is a member of Alpha Tau Omega and Delta Theta Phi fraternities.

They are to make their home in Indianapolis.

Etiquette

By PATRICIA

HOTEL DRESS—A woman's dress in the hotel should be modest, and conspicuous only by its elegance and perfection of detail.

It is bad taste to attract attention by loud colors or extreme styles. In the hotel, the conventional traveling costume may be changed for more comfortable dresses and hats, such as would be worn at home.

When stopping for some time at a small hotel it is not necessary to wear hats in the dining room although that depends somewhat on local customs, for in many places hats always are worn.

HOTEL ETIQUETTE—All the rules for table etiquette should be observed in the dining room. If you drop a fork on the floor, allow the waiter to attend to it. Allow the waiter to serve the meal. If hotel guests wish meals served in their rooms they should request that a waiter be sent to the room with a menu. The order is given and the waiter will see that it is filled satisfactorily.

NO TRUMP SHOWS POWER

South, as dealer, has bid one spade. West has passed and North has bid two hearts. What action should East take, holding 3 1/2 honor tricks?

C with strong hands, made on strong hands of 4-3-3-3 distribution. The no trump bidder's partner therefore is able often to make doubles of the opponents' overcalls, when otherwise such doubles would be impossible.

Today's hand is an example of what may happen to a bold overcaller. North had a typical hand for a Culbertson no trump bid. When South heard East's two diamond overall, he did not pass, as many players would do, because the hand looked weak.

South knew that he and North together had five honor tricks, and that, since North must have at least three diamonds (with a 4-3-3-3 hand), the North-South hands contained seven diamonds against a maximum of six for East and West. Having this advantage both in trump length and high cards, South doubled without fear.

After opening the king of spades, South shifted to the six of hearts. West played the eight, North the ten and East played low. North then led the jack of spades and South overtook with the queen, leading another heart.

This time dummy played the queen, North the king, and East the ace. East led the ace and then the jack of diamonds. North won the jack of diamonds. North won the heart, and cashed the jack of hearts, South throwing his last spade.

When North played the ace of spades, East trumped and South

Punish Child Who Disobeys, Writer Urges

Certainty of Retribution Must Be Ingrained, Parents Told.

BY OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

Discipline and punishment are two separate things. Discipline means to make oneself do, or not do, things (or have somebody else do them) and punishment is penalty for offense. It may be an offense either for commission or omission.

The rightly disciplined child will need little punishment. But the problem here, the eternal problem indeed of all parents, is this. Can there be discipline without punishment?

Yes. Certainly. But not always. Because one of the necessary things to ingrain an idea of the pay demanded by infraction is often some sort of retribution. Read that over. Simple when you get at the roots.

Method Depends on Child

What do I think of whipping? Well, I don't think too much of it, but I do think some. There are children and children. Some will be ruined by one whipping. Others will know no other language and will only respect a burning skin.

He is your child, so I can not tell you. But there is one thing that every mortal being of us has to learn, and that is to take pay for what we deliberately do that is wrong.

What the child thinks is right, you may think is wrong. In this case, I should look very, very carefully into motives that prompt misbehavior. Or, what you think is misbehavior.

Children have a code. They have odd reasons for doing things. Frequently their most noble efforts are mistaken for deliberate disobedience. This is as true as the North Star.

Whipping Loses Effect

But in the case of the deliberately defiant child, some one, some how, must show him that he can't be running the world in the way most agreeable to him. It is kindness to bring him to his senses.

Punishment may lose its effect. Whipping, it is well known, becomes as useless as water on a duck's back. And it can act in reverse, setting up a grim defiance in the child that may be saved up for years.

Maybe he gets merely hopeless and loses forever and all time any will of his own to do anything. Maybe he decides that he is going to earn his whippings and get all he can by hook or mostly crook. Yes, whipping has to be seriously considered.

The very sensitive child may will under one while the hearty rascal won't be influenced one way or the other by a dozen.

Frightening Is Taboo
There are various ways of punishment, known to almost every parent, and the way to use them is to study the child. One is deprivation of a pleasure. Another is to isolate the offender from his friends and family. Never in the dark. Never closed in a closet.

Frightening and threatening of any sort is as out as last spring. That is not punishment, that is inquisition. Threats of a milder sort are silly. They never work. Reasonable warning is different. Children have to be told what may happen if they do things they know are dangerous.

Will your child love you if you punish him? Certainly he will if he has faith in your judgment. He knows that you know best and are reasonable and just. Otherwise he doesn't love you anyway. But you'll never regain him by smacking.

Sings Praises of Popovers for Breakfast

Advices Something Different for Leisurely Sunday Morning Meal.

By NEA Service

One of the finest meals in a well-run American household is the Sunday breakfast. For once, the family is assembled for breakfast and can, on week-days, it's just another meal. Most of us eat sketchy breakfasts, anyway, and Sunday is just the time to have something that can be eaten with leisurely appreciation.

Something like cornbread or popovers in place of toast or rolls, for example.

Recipe Given

There's a school of thought that is firmly convinced that good popovers can only be made in iron pop-over pans. Others favor muffin tins. Whichever you use, here's the recipe for 12 large popovers:

Two eggs, 1 cup milk, 1 cup flour, 2 teaspoons melted butter, 1/2 teaspoon salt.

The real trick in making popovers, no matter what kind of pan you use, iron or tin, is to be sure the pans are piping hot before you put the batter in. Bear this in mind, and your popovers will be all you could hope for.

Grease Pans

First grease the pans thoroughly and put them in the oven until the fat begins to steam.

In the meantime, beat the eggs about two minutes, add the milk and beat again.

The more you beat them, the more air in the batter, making lighter, better popovers.

Sift in the flour, mixed with the salt.

Lastly add the melted butter.

Now, pour the batter into the steaming hot tins, filling them half full.

Place in a moderately hot (350 degrees) oven for 20 minutes.

Pop Over Sides

When the popovers are done they will pop over the sides and top of the tins to about two inches. They will be browned.

They are really nothing but a hollow shell, crisp and brown on the outside.

A good Sunday breakfast would be chilled melon or grapefruit, shredded eggs in ramekins, popovers, home-made jam or honey, and coffee.

Of course, the size of the morning meal on Sundays is determined by what time you have dinner—at noon or in the evening. If you have a late afternoon or evening dinner on Sundays, a large breakfast is in order. Crisp bacon is delicious with shredded eggs and may be added, if you desire.
