

Two Viewpoints on Problem of Living With Old Persons Given in Letters to Column

Jane Advises Woman Who Finds Mother Vexing to Co-operate With Relatives to Place Her in Institution.

Note—Our readers have come upon an interesting difference of viewpoint. A writer said that her home had not been happy since her tedious old mother of 71 had come there to live. This brought letters both of condemnation and sympathy. Have you an experience to add?

DEAR JANE JORDAN—Here is my opinion on the letter about the 71-year-old mother who was driving the family away from home. I think it is the most terrible letter I ever saw published in your column. At best this mother hasn't long to live. She has reared her family, listened to all their whims and wants, deprived herself of pleasures, clothes, etc., so the children could have. She educated her children and taught them to be good mothers and fathers. Now she is old.

She has lost her companion and is lonesome. All she has is memories. Her heart aches for kind words and a gentle pat on the back which she never gets. You can't modernize older people. Neither will young people profit by older people's past experiences. There is nothing sweeter in a home than a grandmother, sitting in a comfortable chair, probably with a little shawl around her shoulders, living over her yesterday.

Why not try a little tenderness and show a little appreciation for all she has done for you? In a few short years you will look at the dear form cold in death. She'll be gone then, never to return. The children who are finding fault now will find other excuses then to stay away. When the time comes for you to live with your children, do you want to write a column about you? Sure you don't!

ANSWER—This letter represents the sentimental viewpoint perfectly. It is held mostly by people who have not lived with the old or who have had no problem with them. Here is the other side of the picture.

DEAR JANE JORDAN—I wish to extend my sympathy to "Another Mother." Her case is mild when compared to mine. I am a widow with three children of school age. I am employed and have furnished a comfortable home, but neither my children nor myself can call it a home, for it is ruled by my mother. (She appointed herself.) She criticizes every move we make, insults our friends, and we are not allowed to use our own things without criticism.

We live in a respectable section of the city, but that doesn't stop her from sitting on the front porch barefooted and with a dirty dress on. Although I have tried to break her of this, she seems to get pleasure from the discomfort it causes me. Then, too, we have to weigh our words, for she can swear like a boiler-maker and loud enough to be heard for blocks.

Although I have two sisters and a brother, neither of them will have her in their homes. Not even for a week-end or for a meal. As mean as she is, she has to live somewhere, but I would be grateful for a breathing spell. What would you do? Understand, there is no reasoning with her. If this "Other Mother" thinks I am heartless, I will gladly let her try a while.

ANSWER—In your place I would combine with my brother and sisters for funds to place the mother in an institution where she would have to conform to the rules of decent living.

JANE JORDAN.

YOU can be smart to your finger-tips in the new suede and kid gloves this fall. There's a long line of exciting styles offered in local shops from which to select your sports and dress numbers.

Subdued colors, like Araby green, oxblood and chardonnay now are almost as staple as black and brown. They can be worn with all the fall costume colors—brown, black, wine green and gray—and matched with top-handle bags, gnome-peaked hats.

With sleeves from three-quarter to elbow length the well-dressed woman will wear a six- or eight-button glove crushed over the wrist. With long or very short sleeves, or with her coat or suit she will prefer a clasp glove or a shorter slip-on.

Corded effects in daytime gloves are outstanding designs of the season. Braided trimming, cuffs of a different leather, large metal buttons, stitching, and thumb lacing are all fancies of the newest gloves.

Elizabeth Hawes inspired the green mocha gloves of splendid cut which carry her sign of "the scissors" in metal at the wrist. The six-button gloves, so smart for formal daytime wear are made of black French kid with unusual cut-out design and fine embroidery work dressing up the cuffs.

Diagonal stitching streaks across these Anglo-suede slip-ons in the form of arrows of varied length. Shown in a rich copper tone; also available in green, wine and brown. Fine embroidery work is exemplified on these white French suede gloves, buttoned at the wrist... a revival you see, of the thin, moulded hand. The tiny flowers which trim cuffs and back-hands are colorful and highly ornamental.

Glove Shades Rich
The new fall shades for gloves are deep and rich. There is nothing flamboyant about the wines, the greens and the soft tans that are as sensible and practical as black and brown.

Campus Outfit

Peggy Ann, the daughter of Gov. Alf Landon, picked this attractive brown and white checked woolen suit for football games and knockabout wear around the campus. The attractive suit includes a slim skirt and seven-eighths length coat that buttons down the front, flares at the hemline and is finished with a brown suede belt.

Her gloves and handbag are brown suede, as are the low-heeled oxford shoes. An off-the-face hat completes the ensemble.

Time Budgets Aid Children, Writer Thinks

Advices Setting Up Habit of Being on Time by Example.

BY OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON
Procrastination is almost inexcusable. Whatever Omar Khayyam said, or Louis the Fourteenth, or some of the merry wis of history, about putting off until tomorrow, well, there isn't anything so mad as denying as the very fellow who follows them.

Now, there is a secret about doing things at once, or being there on time. That is, to do them ahead of time and to be there ahead of time. The urgency of time must be impressed on the child, or all his life he will put off until the last minute and maybe not then. He won't expect the world to wait. A whoop about him, and he is going to be left right on his corner.

Time Should Be Budgeted
I think the parceling of time quite as important as the budgeting of money. There is just as much and no more.

Don't let him start off to his music lesson five minutes late. The teacher will have to throw her whole schedule off just because he wanted to finish.

Don't struggle and scold to get him off to school on time. Make him learn to watch the clock and get there on his own. And if he doesn't show up for supper, don't save his plate. No, don't. Forget about his stomach and don't go carrying up a cold snack to bed later on. He won't starve. A habit of promptness may make him a million dollars some day and provide many meals.

Of course, you will have to cooperate. When he goes to school, breakfast has to be early. You are his best example. The child of dilly-dory parents can't be expected to uphold the honor of the name. This goes for almost everything.

Tardiness Inconsiderate
Nothing makes me madder than to go to the hairdresser's at an appointed hour—maybe I have broken my neck to get there—and find my appointment delayed because Mrs. Jones has done without lunch than wait in the heat for a very casual woman. I have reserved my affection for her ever since.

Make the child prompt. He will never learn young. There are so many reasons for it. But the one is that he will learn poise and security, and not have to excuse himself (if he has the grace) through life.
