G-Man Urges Women Here to Register Fingerprints

BY ELIZABETH CARR

American women leave no fingerprints, except, perhaps on a deck of bridge cards or a coffee pot. That, said Maj. W. H. Drane Lester, inspector of J. Edgar Hoover's famed G-men, places American women "in a worse position than the criminal in some respects."

Speaking before the Indianapolis Council of Women at the Hotel Lincoln yesterday, Maj. Lester urged the fingerprinting of all citizens for their own protection.

He predicted that within the next 10 years "universal fingerprinting" will be common.

"You and every member of your family may have your fingerprints taken by your local law enforcement agency and forwarded to us at Washington," he said. Then if you become an amnesia victim, or are accidentally hurt or killed there is a good possibility that you can be identified by your fingerprints.

Crime Laid to Youth

Almost one out of every five persons arrested in the United States last year for every crime, Maj. Lester said, was a boy or girl under 21 years of age. He asked that "public-spirited citizens take the energies of these children, particularly during their adolescent period, and turn them away from crime and into the proper channels."

Maj. Lester laid down three rules for his listeners to follow:

"1. Prove yourself good parents. The child brought up in a wholesome environment and under proper home conditions rarely will turn to a life of crime.

"2. See to it that children are given the proper kind of education, and by this I mean that the young boy and girl of school age should be taught more in our schools than pages one to four in a certain textbook. Their school training should teach good citizenship and instill in them a wholesome respect for law and order.

Urges Criminal Debuting

"3. Debut the criminal. Take the halo of romance from his head where it has been allowed to rest too long. Expose the criminal and you will find that fewer young Americans will follow in his footsteps."

Rep. Louis Ludlow explained to the council his proposed amendment to the Constitution to provide for a referendum before war could be declared.

"America is in the surges of a peace movement," he said, "which is to reach high tide by the time Congress reconvenes in January."

Pictures Shot in South Seas Help Museum

Mrs. Billie Teel Tappan Exhibits Her Films of Natives.

BY BEATRICE BURGAN

MRS. BILLIE TEEL TAPPAN isn't likely to forget the picturesque scenery and customs of the South Seas which she and her son, Bobby, witnessed. She captured the fascinating setting with a motion picture camera.

Showing the films for the benefit of the Children's Museum, she offers explanatory remarks relating to the natives as they are pictured in the reel. Each time she describes the adventures more memories are revived, she said.

She particularly observed and filmed the different racial types. She points out that Polynesians do not run true to color; the Micronesians are of small stature, and the Melanesians are related closely to the Australian blacks, but more closely resemble the African race.

Some of the legendary actions were photographed. "A scene taken in Tahiti presents a growling ceremonial, in which natives dance on red-hot stones. The idea behind the tortuous rite is that the goddess of crops will answer their appeal for abundance, according to Mrs. Tappan.

Dances Descriptive

"All the dances of the Island of Rarotonga are descriptive and interpret the story of a happening a long ago," Mrs. Tappan explains. She tells why the Samoan men in the pictures are tattooed lavishly. They can't be married until they have a certain amount of decorations on their bodies, she learned.

Mrs. Tappan has mementoes of the islands, which she displays with the film.

Fascinated by War Clubs

Bobby, of course, was fascinated by the native war clubs and brought more than a dozen home. One, given to him by a Tahitian native, was a family relic and supposedly ornamented with a human bone, vestige of days of cannibalism.

Mrs. Tappan had no idea she ever would show the films outside her family circle. Last fall she entertained Girl Scout cookie sales winners with a showing, and the idea of benefiting the museum was suggested to her.

Mrs. Tappan is a Girl Scout worker and handles their publicity.
