

'Anxious' Asks Advice on How to Handle Financial Affairs; She Wants to Manage Money

Jane Says Husband and Wife Should Compromise, She Directing House Expenses and He His Business Needs.

Do you need some one to listen to your troubles? Write a letter to Jane Jordan and read her answers in this column.

DEAR JANE JORDAN—I love my husband so much that it would hurt me terribly to give him up. My disposition is inclined toward being too independent and stubborn, while his is just the opposite. He is too generous and soft-hearted for his own good. He makes good money when he works but his work is not steady. Therefore it takes managing to keep things going. His money comes easy and he lets it go easy. He can't save. He has a good deal of money and then suddenly it is gone. I am not working now but I can go back to work and will not have to ask him for anything.

Together we bought a car which is in my name. What I have tied up in the car is hard-earned money, while his was easy money. I have begged him to let me manage the money which he did for a month. I paid bills and saved. Because I would not go into what I had saved to pay one of his helpers he blew up and said not another penny would go through my fingers and that he would do as he pleased with the car.

So I stopped him from driving the car until he can consider letting me manage the money and the home. This he refuses to do. Should I give in to him or go back to work? When I go back to work, I feel that he has driven me to it and with that feeling I can no longer be a wife to him except in name. If it was my mistake in not paying his helper, was it right for him to break up the home over it? I'm waiting in suspense for your answer.

ANSWER—Can't you compromise? Why don't you manage the money it takes to run the house and let him manage what it takes to run his business? If you are able to save anything don't tell him you have a surplus and then he will not make demands on it.

If you made a mistake in not paying his helper, why don't you admit it to him and come to a clearer agreement about what is to be done with your share of the money? No man will stand for methods which he believes to be unjust. Both of you will have to give in a little if your marriage is to be a going concern.

I can't see why your going back to work because you both need money need mean a wife in name only agreement. It seems to me that you are looking for a way to punish him for his negligence in money matters and I think your plan pretty poor. Many women work because they want money but it does not occur to them that work calls for a platonic relationship at home.

The resentful feelings caused by this little upset will die down after a while. When you're both cool and calm, try working out the compromise I have suggested.

DEAR JANE JORDAN—I am 18, going steady with a boy the same age. He has proposed three or four times and the last time I told him I'd like to be engaged first and for him to bring a ring. Somehow he doesn't think I'm serious. He said if he didn't have a car I would drop him. That I wouldn't even think of. He also said I'd have to swear on a stack of Bibles before he would believe we were engaged. I really care for him and would be proud to be his wife. Do you think he is sorry he proposed and is using this as an excuse to back out?

ANSWER—No matter how much an 18-year-old boy is intrigued with the idea of marriage he is seldom financially able to back up his proposals. I imagine he has no money for a ring. Don't you think he is just flirting with the idea of getting married and that it would scare him to death to be accepted? He accuses you of not being serious when he is the one who can't afford to be serious.

JANE JORDAN.

Election Is Seen as Mandate for Merit Placement

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—A public mandate has been given for the extension of the merit system in government, the National League of Women Voters' directorate was told at its meeting here yesterday by Miss Marguerite M. Wells, Minneapolis president.

In a statement on merit system progress, Miss Wells said that Roosevelt's great vote of confidence gives him an unprecedented opportunity to fulfill almost immediately one pledge of the Democratic platform on which he was elected, namely "We pledge the immediate extension of the merit system through the classified service."

The League has been promoting establishment of the merit system nationally and in the various states. "While the 1932 Democratic platform contained no civil service plank, President Roosevelt has made several public pronouncements in favor of the merit system," Miss Wells said. "It is a matter of public record that during these years more than 200,000 employees have been added to the government rolls without civil service classification. He already has taken steps, by executive orders, to place all postmaster and HOLC employees in the merit system and to improve the method of transferring exempt employees."

TONIGHT AT 8:30

This is the name of Noel Coward's new play which is to open in New York Nov. 25, starring Gertrude Lawrence.

It might also be a title to the picture (above) which may call to mind a vision of yourself and your dancing partner as you will look when you step on to the ballroom at tonight's dinner dance. You are wearing an alluring gown of white draped shoulders drop over the shoulder to form a brief cape and are caught low in the back. The skirt swings in easy rhythm to all the terpsichorean tricks. You are "pure gold" in the eyes of your admirer. . . . revelation of loveliness in shining fabric!

THIS gown is of the Gertrude Lawrence type, characterized as "the quintessence of everything social." Norman Hartnell, her dressmaker, is also Mrs. "Wally" Simpson's English dressmaker. Juliet caps—"blind date hats"—as these whiffs of veils and flowers are now being called, are sponsored by this couturier and being adopted by American debs and matrons, alike. Miss Lawrence, in her new play, sets a little gold cap on the back of her blond head and, in spite of her 38 years, looks like a dancing daughter.

Frivolous touches, like this, challenge the actress in every woman who yearns to take the center of the stage. You might as well get into practice "dressing up" for these caps as captivates social world leaders here and everywhere. Fashion across the footlights is part of the thrill in seeing "Tonight at 8:30," as reported by a previewer. A boise de rose evening gown, very bouffant, dripping with shaded hydrangeas is the centerpiece of Miss Lawrence's clothes collection. An aquamarine blue satin evening gown and cape trimmed with silver fox is another "special occasion" gown which she wears, and which may be found in similar style in our own local shops.

ANSWER TO PREVIOUS PROBLEM

BY WILLIAM E. MCKENNEY
American Bridge League Secretary

MISS MARGARET BEECH of Pittsburgh was one of the winners in the national women's team of four contest the first time she attended a national tournament of the American Bridge League.

That was back in 1928, when organized bridge was in its swaddling clothes. Now, eight years later, when the tenth annual national winter championship tournament of the league gets under way in Chicago, the week of Nov. 30, she again will be a member of a competing team, hoping, as all bridge players do, to repeat her former victory.

If she and her teammates play their cards as well as Miss Beech did with today's hand, victory should be easy.

The adverse bidding requires little comment. West, not vulnerable, injected a no trump bid with a diamond run out, and East tried to help along the cause with his heart bid, but Miss Beech, who sat South, was not misled. In fact, if anything, she found adverse bidding helpful rather than otherwise.

The opening diamond lead was ruffed. On the second trump lead, East was returned another diamond. This South ruffed, and then cashed three heart tricks. Miss Beech followed with the rest of her spades.

West was squeezed. He could not hold a diamond honor and also three clubs, as the last four cards in dummy were the ace, king and nine of clubs and the ten of diamonds. West, who had to discard first, held the ace of diamonds and the queen, jack, and ten of clubs.

Children Need a Few Knocks, Writer Says

Life of Kindness Fails to Prepare Them for Seamy Side.

BY OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

Kindness is a great thing. We try to teach it and live it, as far as it lies within our power to do so. It is the first of the virtues we teach the children. It is the basis of most religions. Around it we have woven romances and drama. We take it as the criterion of character, and denounce those who renounce it.

And yet, for all this, the world goes jogging right along without giving it more time than it can spare.

Now, this sort of thing has to be faced. Yet we don't face it. Stop and think about the way we go through our days and weeks. Don't we wake up each morning with the conviction that every one is going to be sweet and lovely and kind? We do. And if something happens to give us a nasty job, we are miserable for hours.

Remove Tinted Glasses. Perhaps it is a hard creed to teach, to suggest that we should expect cuts, sharp words, jealousy and scorn. But why not? It is childish to go on dreaming forever that we shall get only smiles and approval from every one who crosses our path.

If parents could fine some magic way to fortify the child against sensitiveness and make him take the unkind with the kind, without hurt or brooding, they would have discovered the answer to many of the miseries that not only beset childhood, but the life of the youth, the girl, the man and the woman.

Sometimes I think that we make too much of the word "inferiority." Can it be possible that we are softening our children to a serious degree, by never accustoming them to any other treatment than kindness?

Avoid Rude Awakening.

It is almost dangerous to suggest such a thing, as so many poor little souls are starved for more affection and loving care than they get. So I tread lightly, in case some one misunderstands. The point I make is that there is just a possibility that the child who never hears anything but the sweetest words, and knows what this tough old world can be like, will become supersensitive the minute he discovers how hateful certain people can be. And, "less he is a curiosity, he will have to discover it sometime, be sure." (Copyright, 1936, NEA Service, Inc.)

Recipe Changes Cold Roast to Delicious Meal

Prune-Cream Cheese Pie Suggested to Top Off Dinner.

By NEA Service

Cold roast beef becomes hot news in this recipe. For four bountiful Monday night servings, use two cups cold beef cut in one-inch cubes; two tablespoons onion, cut fine; one cup diced raw carrots; one cup diced raw potatoes; one tablespoon chopped green peppers; one tablespoon diced raw celery; 1/4 teaspoon pepper; one teaspoon salt; one cup stock.

Use a large iron frying pan. Heat a little fat, then turn in the meat and onions. Sauté a few minutes, shaking frequently, and then add all the other vegetables. Season. Add the stock, made of clear meat or chicken broth, or boiling water with a bouillon cube dissolved in it. If bouillon cube is used, reduce amount of salt. Cover, simmer for 15 minutes. Thicken slightly and pour into well-greased baking dish. You are ready for the pastry top.

For the top use two cups flour, three teaspoons baking powder, one teaspoon salt, four tablespoons shortening, 2-3 cup milk. Sift dry ingredients together, cut in shortening, add milk and stir rapidly until mixture has thickened. Roll to 1/4 inch thickness on floured board. Cut a one-inch square from center of dough to enable steam to escape. Then place this pastry top over the impatient meat mixture. Bake in hot oven for 30 minutes. Serve steaming hot.

Prune pie with a cream cheese top is another high hat Monday treat. Chop one cup cooked and pitted prunes to fill your baked pie shell 1/4 full. To chopped prunes, add a suspicion of nutmeg and 1/4 cup chopped nut meats. Next mash two packages cream cheese with a fork until soft to smooth paste with a little cream. Spread this in a deep rich layer over the prunes. And that's a pie you'll tip your hat to.

THE CHURCH WEDDING—The list of guests should be made up early by both the bride and her fiancé.

Do not invite more than can be accommodated comfortably at the reception.

The list, for the use of ushers, indicating the guests who will occupy the front pews, must be made up. The bride's relatives and intimate friends have the seats on the left side of the center aisle; those of the bridegroom are seated on the right.

Usually there is a wedding rehearsal on the evening before the wedding, and it is customary for the bride to ask the wedding party to her home afterward for supper. The bride never takes part in the rehearsal.
