

WALLS TALKS WITH SOLICITOR ABOUT DIVORCE

Report She May Close Her
London Home; Monte Carlo Visit Is Set.

Simpson would not return to her town house for many months, if ever. She said also that she did not read any newspapers, and depended on telephone calls from London for all news.

Phone Line Installed

An additional telephone line, reserved for foreign calls, was strung into the Rogers villa.

The official, insistently repeated story is that the three men charted an airplane, awaited its arrival at Croydon, flew across the English Channel and across fog-bound France—a most hazardous flight—so that Goddard could discuss the details of closing Mrs. Simpson's London home, on which she has a lease that will not expire for nearly a year.

Goddard, the story is, brought Barron to aid him in that big job and brought Kirkwood, one of London's leading gynecologists, as his personal physician, because he was not feeling so well.

Marriage Idea Denied

It was reported here that the airplane actually was chartered by the British Air Ministry and in London friends of Mrs. Simpson asserted that even if the King abdicated Mrs. Simpson definitely would not marry him.

To marry, she must obtain a final decree. None such has been issued only six months after the decree nisi, or of nullity, such as Mrs. Simpson obtained Oct. 27. In special cases, by court dispensation, a final decree may be granted sooner. In other cases a final decree never is issued.

There have been many angles to this romance and it was but natural that the airplane arrivals as well as Mrs. Simpson should be watched. Yet Lord Browlow, Edward's gentleman in waiting who accompanied Mrs. Simpson here and is her spokesman, said just before the Londoners arrived at midnight:

"My only knowledge of the occupants of the plane is that it contained Mr. Goddard, who came down on his own suggestion to discuss details in regard to closing Mrs. Simpson's town house, as she has no intention of returning to London for the time being. I have no knowledge of Dr. Kirkwood or the other occupants of the plane (Barron, Goddard's associate, the pilot and a radio man)."

Newspaper correspondents pondered over Browlow's statement and found it difficult to reconcile it with such a dramatic airplane flight in a heavy fog. They went back early this morning, just after midnight, and asked him to make another statement. He came out to the gates of the Rogers villa and said:

"Gentlemen, I wish to thank you very heartily for the letter you sent me. (The request for a statement was made by note.)"

Denies Any Connection
"I give you my word of honor that the arrival of Dr. Kirkwood with Mr. Goddard tonight has nothing to do with Mrs. Simpson. I did not know her name until this morning. I have learned since that Mr. Goddard was coming at his own request to discuss with Mrs. Simpson the closing of her town house in London as she has no intention of going to London for some time. Mr. Goddard has not communicated with me. He has not notified us of his arrival. He assured me that Dr. Kirkwood is a personal friend and a practicing physician in Sloane Street in London. As Goddard is in a poor state of health and not used to flying, Dr. Kirkwood accompanied him, as did his assistant Mr. Barron."

"Dr. Kirkwood is not coming to the villa and will not have any contact with Mrs. Simpson at all. His presence here has no connection with her going to Monte Carlo tomorrow."

King's Decision-Held Up; Baldwin 'Hopes' to Make Statement by Tomorrow

Reports Grow That Edward Has Decided to Abdicate
And That York May Not Ascend Throne;
Elizabeth Then Next in Line.

ernoon for a further conference with his brother.

The Duke of York reached Port Belvedere shortly after 4 p. m. Sir Godfrey Thomas, assistant private secretary to the King, returned in mid-afternoon after an absence of six hours.

The Duke of Kent, youngest brother of the King, left five minutes after the Duke of York arrived. In London, it was understood that members of Parliament belonging to the government parties have been advised to cancel all other engagements tomorrow to enable a full attendance to hear Baldwin's statement, indicating that it will be of the utmost importance.

Walter T. Monckton, attorney general of the Duchy of Cornwall and legal adviser to the King, visited No. 10 Downing-st. during Baldwin's absence in Commons and remained an hour. Sir Edward Peacock, Receiver General of the Duchy, was another visitor.

An army corporal dispatch rider was summoned to No. 10 Downing Street at 10:45 a. m. (Indianapolis time), collected a red dispatch case and immediately rushed away, presumably to Port Belvedere.

The dispatch rider arrived at Port Belvedere less than an hour later. Belief was growing, meanwhile, in usually well-informed sources that the possibility of abdication was stronger than at any time since the crisis arose.

There was talk that the Duke of York, heir to the throne, might not accept the crown and that Elizabeth, his daughter, would become sovereign and a regency named.

Edward held a long conference last night with Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, the Dukes of York and Kent and his legal adviser.

Kent Pleads With Him
The Duke of Kent, the King's youngest, favorite brother, his only supporter in the royal family in his romance with Mrs. Simpson, remained with Edward all night, pleading with him to think again of his country, his family and his own eventual happiness.

There have been many changes in the crisis over the King's insistence on marrying the American divorcee and it was impossible to say these would be no more.

But as cabinet members met this morning, the belief grew that Edward was going to abdicate, if not now, later.

The King was understood to have told Baldwin Monday night that he intended to abdicate. Baldwin persuaded him to think again. The King was believed to have reaffirmed his intention last night.

Also, between the two conferences, it was apparent every arrangement had been made for the eventuality of abdication, that the machinery had been perfected and that all plans had been discussed for the King's future income.

The King's heir presumptive, in the absence of a child of his own, is his brother, the Duke of York, who will be 41 years old next Monday.

in circumstances that added mystery to the situation.

Two members of the firm of solicitors which acted for her in her recent divorce case conferred with her. The lawyers were accompanied by a gynecologist of London. It was asserted officially that the solicitors chartered a special airplane, waited at Croydon airport for it, and flew across fog-bound France to a dangerous landing to arrange to close Mrs. Simpson's London home—and that the physician accompanied the head of the firm because he was not well.

Interest on King
But Great Britain's interest and the empire's interest centered on the King, the one-time Prince Charming in whose devotion to duty their hopes had lain.

The drama whose actors, in however minute a role, were spread over the globe, was tinged dark with a sense of tragedy.

The case has reached historic importance. There was no doubt that its principals would bear through-out their lives the scars which history carries with it.

There were persistent reports, from sources close to Mrs. Simpson, rather than to the King, that it was improbable there would be a marriage even if he gave up his throne.

In any event, there was over the romance the shadow of a crisis serious enough to impel a man—even if by some chance the impulse was overcome at the last hour—to give up a throne to which he had been born, to ignore the pleas of his family and of the people who loved him in the belief that his life was dedicated to them as their symbol of unity, to walk out of his job at a moment when Lloyd's insurance underwriters had decided that they could no longer issue policies guaranteeing against loss in a war from destruction of buildings in his kingdom.

Lords Meet Twice
In the expectation that this would be the climactic day, the House of Lords, which adjourned at 6:40 o'clock last evening, met again at 11 p. m. (5 p. m. Indianapolis time), and heard read for the first time a bill which provides for continuance of expiring laws. It was a two-minute session, called so that there would be no path for any emergency legislation by the government.

There was no precedent for this situation. In the event of abdication, it was believed Edward's last act would be to give his royal assent to a deed of abdication, passed by Parliament.

It would be necessary to arrange, in this deed or in another document, for the accession of the successor, for there must never be an instant's interregnum in British rule.

London was tense for a "leak" that would disclose, officially, the final decision.

But so jealous is the Parliament of its prerogatives that it observes the greatest secrecy until the announcement is made in Commons, and later in the Lords.

Baldwin was close-mouthed when he returned late last night from Port Belvedere. Sir John Simon, home secretary, was waiting for him at No. 10 Downing Street. Baldwin's official residence. He had been waiting an hour and 40 minutes. Simon left Downing Street at 11:45 p. m. (5:45 p. m. Indianapolis time), after a 45-minute talk. It is notable that Simon is the government's foremost legal expert.

Royal Family Downcast
Members of the royal family, and particularly Queen Mary, were understood to be profoundly downcast in the belief that there was no more hope that King Edward would remain on his throne.

Aside from the rise and fall of hope at intervals during the emergency, the real feeling was expressed clearly and truthfully today in the Morning Post, an ultra-conservative and court newspaper.

"There is a feeling in parliamentary circles that the King may ultimately feel himself compelled to abdicate," said the Post. "Preparations for the distressing contingency of his abdication are being made as a precautionary measure. Significance is attached to this in connection with the presence at No. 10 Downing Street yesterday of Sir Eric Milne (secretary to the Duke of York) and Sir Edward Peacock (receiver general of the Duchy of Cornwall from which the King derives rich revenues)."

$1.50 LAW WAS DEFICIT THREAT, SURVEY CLAIMS

Indiana Would Have Gone
$43,000,000 in the Hole,
Analysis Says.

BY TRISTRAM COFFIN

A tax deficiency of more than $43,000,000 would have threatened Indiana in 1935 if property rates had been fixed at $1 and $1.50 maximums, an analysis prepared for the State Legislative Tax Survey Commission charged today.

The study, prepared from public records, was released by State Senator Floyd I. Hemmer, Huntingburg, commission chairman.

Limitation laws now on the statute books limit over-all property tax rates to $1.50 in cities and towns and $1 in townships, except when emergencies are declared.

Taxes levied in 1934 and collected in 1935 amounted to $91,345,124.38. Only $47,630,142.82 would have been collected had no emergencies been declared, the report shows.

Township Taxes
Taxes charged in townships were $28,525,561.90 as compared to $15,587,405.04, which would have been charged under a $1 limit. Property taxes levied in cities were $57,219,204.69, compared to $29,401,611.80, and from towns $5,532,357.79 as compared to $2,861,127.98.

Under a $1 limit, the deficit would have amounted to $43,514,981.56, according to the analysis.

Marion County
Poll taxes levied in 1934 and collectable in 1935 were $398,317 in counties and townships, in cities $277,906 and in towns $47,037.

Marion County
Total assessed valuation of Indiana property in 1934, in townships was $1,521,574,435, and $28,525,561.90 was charged in taxes. Under a $1 limit, exclusive of poll tax, excluding poll tax, would have been levied.

Assessed valuation of all towns in Marion County amounted to $11,732,010, and $247,154.44 was charged as compared to $175,980.15.

Property in Indiana, cities was valued at $1,038,393,824, and taxes levied amounted to $67,219,204.69 as compared to $28,073,805.80, exclusive of poll tax, under a $1.50 limit.

The five townships in which Indianapolis is located levied varying tax rates in 1934. Center Township with a valuation of $420,881,270 and a rate of $2.58, charged $10,968,143.77 compared to $6,312,469.05, exclusive of poll tax, with a $1.50 limit.

Perry Township: Valuation, $847,180; rate, $2.75; taxes levied, $24,113.45; limited without poll tax, $12,707.70. Warren Township: Valuation, $1,349,770; rate, $2.58; levied, $346,688.04; limited, $207,746.55. Washington Township: Valuation, $55,758,100; rate, $2.57; levied, $1,451,479.71; limited, $896,372.40. Wayne Township: Valuation, $15,310,000; rate, $2.54; levied, $1,071.16; limited, $229,641.

By provision of the limitation laws, cities and towns are authorized to fix rates 50 cents higher than the townships on the theory that city and town rates are obligated to maintain services and incur debts which civil townships are not.

Chief services of cities and towns are police and fire protection, health services, parks and recreation, garbage disposal, courts, libraries, parks, streets and interest payments.

Expense of Services
In 1934, total expenditures for these services cost the cities $20,584,394.16, or a required rate of $1.08. Rates in other years to meet these services were 83 cents, 1928; 84 cents, 1929; 91 cents, 1930; 93 cents, 1931; 88 cents, 1932, and 97 cents, 1933.

Cost of additional expenditures in towns totaled $698,746.72, or a required rate of 45 cents in 1933. Rates required in other years were 50 cents, 1928; 54 cents, 1929; 53 cents, 1930; 46 cents, 1931, and 42 cents, 1932.

The average rate for poor relief in the 1016 townships of the state on the basis of taxes levied in 1934 was 18 cents. The average rate in the 896 townships in which no part of a city was located was 17 cents, and the average rate in the 120

LOYALISTS PUSH SWIFT ADVANCE

Rebel Capital Objective in Move to Halt Big Madrid Attack.

By United Press
MADRID, Dec. 9.—Government troops pushed a swift advance on Burgos, the rebel capital, today before insurgents could loose their expected big attack on Madrid.

While both rebel and loyalist forces remained inactive in the frozen trenches around Madrid, word came from the north telling of heavy fighting on the Santander front where government troops now dominate the railway to Burgos.

Fighting through the snow and ice in the Cantabrian mountains, the Basque loyalists took Alto Dues Quiano and the fortified town of Clariarte, in their drive on the rebel capital, and entrenched themselves on a line centering on Orduna, with extensions to Amurrio and Revalpida.

The advance brought them to within 25 miles of Vitoria, an important rail head on a direct line from Burgos to Bordeaux, France, which, in government possession, would insure a line of supplies from France.

Food rationing was ordered as Madrid began the 33d day of its siege. One of the last sources of meat supply went up in a cloud of smoke when a rebel airplane bomb hit a butcher shop in the Cuatro Caminos district yesterday.

STICK TO GUNS TO WIN; SHAW TELLS MONARCH

King Was Victor in Similar

in her country if she were to have a position of inferiority.

"This sort of notion that the King could be half-married is nonsense, could he be married to a royal princess—if there's any left in good standing. The Swedish family is about the only royal family left with any standing."

Family's Assent Seen
Asked if he had heard reports that the English royal family would not stand Mrs. Simpson's taking precedence and rank, Shaw said:

"As a matter of fact, they would have to if the King persists. But his family can not be unanimous on that. Besides, you hear 50,000 silly stories like that one, but it's not the sort of thing that counts."

Referring to certain objections of mixing aristocratic blue blood with the blood of a commoner, the playwright said:

"Mrs. Simpson's blood is just as blue as that of any royal princess. She holds the highest position in her country, which is a republic, and after all the world is a republican world except for a few corners."

Would "Snub" U. S.
"There are some people left who hope that the by-gone powers of kings will return. These same people still hope that all these vulgar republics will be swept away. That, of course, is tripe."

On the report of British refusal to sanction the marriage, Shaw said:

"Of course it would be a snub to the United States and a gross insult. I do not know what the American ambassador here would do—probably refuse to attend the coronation."

On the possibility of a possible regency in England, he said:

"I can not imagine anything more silly than a regency. Besides, the Duke of York is not the one to decide. After all, if the King dies or abdicates the Duke of York will succeed him, and neither he nor the Duchess can say they want Elizabeth (their daughter) to succeed in this place."

"Good heavens! What are people thinking of?"
