Bishop's Talk Is Scheduled

Methodist Clergyman Is to Speak at Purdue.

THE MIRACLES that he has studied in the lessons thus far have symbolized the power of Jesus to give life, to heal, and to bring light to the darkened souls of men. Here in our lesson we come to the ultimate miracle of the power of Jesus over death, the miracle attested in His own death and resurrection.

It is a very human story that is presented, of two sisters in Bethany, Martha and Mary, who were very unlike in their dispositions, but had in common a loyalty to the Master and a love for Him that made Him an honored guest in their home.

Into this home sorrow had come in the death of their brother, and the deep sympathy of Jesus, as well as His intense devotion to that hospitable home, is found in the simple words concerning His coming into the house of death—"Jesus wept."

The story of how Jesus brought Lazarus forth from the tomb is familiar to us all. It brings to every thoughtful and inquiring mind some very poignant questions. Why did Jesus weep, if He had the power to bring Lazarus from the dead? Why was the power of Jesus not exercised in more homes and circles of sorrow in His own day?

There must have been many, many cases of bereaved disciples, and yet the stories of Jesus bringing the dead to life are few. Why is the same power of Jesus not manifest in homes of death and sorrow today, where the devotion to the Master is as intense as it was in that home where Martha and Mary loved Him?

These questions we cannot answer, any more than we can explain the miracle. The rationalist might say that these stories have come from traditions that arose around the life of the Master, as they have arisen in some form around the lives of other great teachers and prophets.

But we cannot dispose of the miracles quite so easily. The miraculous records are imbedded in the days of His life on earth, and we cannot feel that the life and salvation that Jesus brings to men have their ending in death and the tomb.

We have suggested that the miracles beyond the literal record have the symbolism of spiritual truth, and this is surely true concerning the miracle of restoring the dead to life. That is what Jesus does spiritually in the souls of men. His recreating and reviving power has everywhere been manifest, both in the days of His life on earth, and all the years since, in the times and places where His gospel has made its power felt.

IN His earthly life and teaching, Jesus never promised His disciples immunity from pain and sorrow; He never told them that they would have unlimited physical extension. What He did promise was that eternal life would be the portion of those who found in Him the Way and the Truth.

School children and youth organizations are celebrating "Civic Heroes Week," which opened Feb. 12 and is to continue until Monday. Purpose of the program is to bring to the attention of young people the achievements of such heroes as Florence Nightingale, Abraham Lincoln, Luther Burbank, George Washington, Harold Gray, St. Francis, Gandhi, Toyohiko Kagawa and Albert Schweitzer, sponsor, explained.

"Civic Heroes Week" is sponsored each year by the International Good Will League of the Church Federation. The Rev. Wilbur D. Grose is committee chairman.

Members of Memorial Baptist Church are to honor their pastor, the Rev. Guy O. Carpenter, at the church Tuesday evening.

The occasion will be the anniversary of his pastorate. Mr. Kimsey formerly was a Baptist Church pastor.

The Indiana Central College Choir is to present a musical vespers program at 8 p. m. tomorrow in North Methodist Church, Meridian and 38th St.

Soloists who are to assist in the program are Mrs. Helen Thomas Martin, organist; Miss Helen Flagg, harpist; Miss Dorothy Cain, violinist, and Miss Phyllis Lynn, cellist.
