

'The Hurricane' at Loew's A Thing to Blow About; Innocuous Mae at Indiana

Hollywood at Height of Its Art in Simulating
Furious Nature.

'Every Day's a Holiday'
Seen as Good Family
Entertainment.

By JAMES THRASHER

Loew's has something to blow about this week in its current offering, Samuel Goldwyn's much-heralded "The Hurricane."

The picture exhibits Hollywood magic in its highest form. And being one who is all for the movies, I feel free to whisper a few words about Miss Mae West, who is appearing this week at the Indiana in a picture called "Every Day's a Holiday."

Miss West is responsible for the screen play as well as the star performance. And that with all the winging that Miss West has undergone during recent years, the whole thing emerges as perfectly innocuous family entertainment.

One might say, however, without fear of much contradiction, that the play-right actress' art is of rather limited scope. Hence, the current vehicle presents her again with the familiar feathered hat, leg-of-mutton sleeves, insinuating asides and sinuous locomotion.

Seen as Belle of 1930

As Peaches O'Day, Miss West is seen as a belle of 1899-1900 with an incurable habit of selling the Brooklyn Bridge to citizens. This is complicated by a slight weakness for grand larceny. So, by the time she meets Charles Butterworth, who is butler to Charles Winninger, she has some 25 warrants out for her arrest.

From selling the bridge, Peaches proceeds to a starring part in the show of one "Nifty" Bally (Walter Catlett). To do this she has to impersonate Mlle. Fifi of Paris, with the help of a black wig, because honest Capt. McCrea (Edmund Lowe) is on her trail.

Spurred by Fifi, a crooked police inspector threatens to close the new show. So Peaches, Mr. Winninger, who is the show's backer, and others decide to put up honest Capt. McCrea for mayor against the inspector. After the usual complications, he seems to be winning at the final defeat.

Gives Glimpse of Rector

The picture gives you glimpses of George Rector in a replica of his restaurant at the century's turn, a song or two by Miss West, and some not-so-funny performances by Comedians Winninger, Butterworth and Catlett, all of whom are able to do better.

I had been nourishing a faint hope for some time that Miss West might be passed over in the Hollywood shuffle, and that her studio would forget to give her a new picture. But things being as they are, "Every Day's a Holiday" may please some old Mae West fans who are lurking about.

They even may be able to figure out what the title has to do with the picture.

No Dull Moments

Here is a picture with no dull moments, and few restful ones. For before the storm comes, there is the sad case of the native boy, Terangi, who is a white man who has been captured and is imprisoned, and the Governor of his island, who makes a fetish of law and duty, refuses to intervene.

Terangi's efforts to escape only add to his punishment, and the length of his sentence. At length he does escape, and sails an outrigger canoe the 600 miles from Tahiti back home to his wife and daughter he never has seen.

The Governor learns of his escape, and sets out in pursuit. Then the hurricane comes up. Terangi lashes his wife and child to a tree, then goes to the church where the others are huddled, and rescues the Governor's wife.

The church and its inhabitants are swept away. The only survivors are those who float out to sea on the tree, and a few in a row boat, where the island doctor and a ship's captain search the wreck of the survivors in the wreck of the captain's ship. And when the Governor finds his wife, he is a softened, humanized man. So much so that, seeing Terangi and his wife and daughter sailing away in their canoe, he agrees with his wife that it is "only a floating log."

Furious Nature Simulated

"The Hurricane" certainly has more of that "elemental sweep" than any previous cinematic simulation of furious nature. Imagination and detailed preparation have produced a spectacular and overpowering intensity in the storm scene. The whole thing has beauty and swift motion and power. Here the movies are seen in a splendid accomplishment within their own undisputed element.

Jon Hall, a handsome young South Seas Tarzan, contributes some fine diving, swimming and all the acting that is necessary to Terangi's role. Dorothy Lamour is good as the wife. But acting honors go to Thomas Mitchell as the doctor, and Raymond Massey as the Governor. Mary Astor and C. Aubrey Smith also are seen to excellent advantage.

SPENCER TRACY
WOULD BE PILOT

Following Clark Gable's determination to earn a pilot's license during the production of "Test Pilot," Spencer Tracy has announced that he, too, would strive for enough solo flying hours to get his own license.

Tracy learned to fly during the making of "Sky Devils." Since that time he has made occasional excursions into the air, but took polo more seriously than aerobatics. Gable learned to fly some years ago from naval pilots at San Diego.

HOW GRACIE STARTED

George Burns and Gracie Allen, now featured in "College Swing," were originally a vaudeville team, with Gracie "feeding" George for laughs. But audiences laughed at her flat voice, so the funny lines were switched to Gracie, resulting in their present phenomenal success.

STARS IN ZANE GREY FILM

A new Zane Grey film adaptation, "Born to the West," will have its first Indianapolis showing at the Alamo, beginning today. Two of the players, Marsha Hunt and John Mack Brown, are shown above. Others in the cast are John Wayne and Monte Blue.

'Wise Girl' at Circle Stars Miriam Hopkins in Bohemia

Miriam Hopkins is supposed to go bohemian at the Circle this week, but if the quality of her work is the prop upon which "Wise Girl" must lean, the transition might better be described as "going hobo-hemian."

In other words, Miss Hopkins is not at her very best in this effort. It isn't a bad story and she has a pretty good supporting cast. But "Wise Girl" seems to be thrown out of place somewhere in its early moments and never quite regains it. It is more than possible that Leigh Jason, the director, was incapable of handling his assignment.

Miss Hopkins plays the part of Susan, the daughter of a very wealthy family, who takes it upon herself to rescue her two nieces from their foster father, a penniless artist. It becomes necessary for Susan to disguise herself as an equally penniless actress and worm her way into John's (Ray Milland) confidence to accomplish her end, inasmuch as he has good legal title to the little girls.

Helps Him Lose Job

She then helps him lose his job, providing the "no-visual-means-of-proof" evidence for her father's attorneys. The children are seized by the juvenile court and John is free to paint, as has been Susan's plan from the start. But, of course, everything comes out right in the end and there is every reason to believe that the author, the director and the actors knew it would.

Much of the action of the picture takes place in a sort of inner Greenwich Village, in The Village, whose inhabitants are supposed to be poverty stricken and shabby. This is a place of cleanliness and fresh paint and well-fed looks and sunshine!

Otherwise "Wise Girl" is a light

Bowes' Collegiate Revue, Dancing Edwards Head Stage Program at Lyric

Flying Top Hatters on Roller Skates, Yodeling Cowboy and Film Feature, "Sergeant Murphy," Round Out Bill.

Everyone wears a varsity sweater on the Lyric stage this week, including Ed Resener and his violin.

The Major Bowes "Collegiate Revue" is composed of young persons recruited from American universities who have the type of talent the Major requires. They are all specialists, and good ones.

Raymond (Little Sousa) Barrett, master of ceremonies, keeps things going at a furious pace.

Roller Skating Act

The Flying Top Hatters present a speedy, thrilling act on roller skates. Doty and Bobby Edwards, dancers, perform with skill the stair dance popularized by two famous tappers, Fred Stone and Bill (Bo-jangles) Robinson.

Mr. Barrett and his saxophone-like musical instrument hit a high spot in the entertainment. He renders nearly the entire overture of "William Tell," or so it seems, in unique style.

The transition experienced by "Barbershop harmony" in recent years is demonstrated by a male trio, and a "Boston cowboy" gives definite proof that all yodeling is not necessarily Swiss.

Cord Band

Carol Stanley, a cord band with a variety of talents, Joe Higgins and Roy Davis, and a number of other entertainers complete the bill. It is a good show.

The film feature is "Sergeant Murphy," a story based on the well-known legend of the cavalryman and his horse who both try to leave

CARRADINE STARTS
ROLE IN 'KIDNAPED'

John Carradine, whose brilliant character portrayals of everyone from Abraham Lincoln to the dark-eyed villain have made him the most-loaned-out player in Hollywood, has returned to his home lot in "Kidnaped."

Warner Baxter, Freddie Bartholomew, Leon Ames, Ralph Forbes, Moroni Olson and Arleen Whelan have already been set for roles in the important production based on the famed R. L. Stevenson story.
