Script May Give Clue to Dress Needs

By MARIAN YOUNG

NEW YORK, Oct. 3 (NEA).—If your handwriting slants forward perceptibly, beware of hurried shopping tours. Don't buy a dress until you have looked at several and tried on the favorite a second time. Because the forward slant denotes, among other things, impulsiveness. And that little characteristic is of no help at all when it comes to assembling a wardrobe.

Hello—Miss Sara

1. This is the handwriting of a woman with a strong sense of the dramatic and a lively imagination. Her clothes should provide a vivid background, with nothing drab about them.

According to Dorothy Sara, dark-haired attractive graphologist, who can tell by looking at your handwriting the kind of person you are and the type of clothes you should wear to bring out the best points of your personality, the extreme backhand angle shows restraint and repression. So the woman who writes a definite backhand probably is the one who needs a red hat to lift her out of the depressions from which she is likely to suffer. Rather unrestrained, dashing splashes of color here and there often are better for her than conservative, strictly tailored, quiet suits and dresses.

Emphasizing Personality

"One whose handwriting indicates a great sense of values, a nice balance between mind and emotion ought to lean toward tailored clothes," says Miss Sara. "Such costumes will serve to emphasize the strongest point of her personality which is balance."

I am interested

2. This was written by a woman who has a fine sense of values, who maintains a nice balance between mind and emotion. She ought to wear tailored clothes of fine materials and workmanship.

"But if her handwriting shows a strong dramatic sense and a lively imagination, she needs clothes that provide a vivid background, with nothing drab about them. She shouldn't follow fashion trends blindly. Rather, she should bring out her individuality by wearing things in tune with the mode, of course, but which suit her own personality."

It was a chance remark from her employer, an art critic, which started Dorothy Sara on the road to a career as a graphologist. "My boss saw a letter from a young man I liked pretty well then. After studying the letter for a few moments, he proceeded to describe the boy's character so well that I decided there must be something very revealing in handwriting. So I started studying it as a hobby. Now it's a career."

In addition to making analyses for women with clothes problems, Miss Sara is in wide demand by socially prominent hostesses. Nothing, they say, leads more to a party or makes the shyest guest actually forget his self-consciousness any more quickly than the presence of a handwriting expert. Furthermore, Miss Sara has quite a large private clientele. Some come from person, but the majority send her samples of their handwriting, or their friends' and ask to have the analyses mailed.

Reads Men's Scripts

Not at all unexpectedly, a great many of the samples Miss Sara receives are excerpts of letters written by men. The girls to whom the letters were written send them in.

in quite recent

3. The writer of this sample has a wonderful sense of rhythm. She never should overdress. Casual clothes that allow a great deal of freedom are her forte. She should concentrate on these.

"Naturally," Dorothy Sara laughed, "Neither I, nor any other conscientious graphologist, can tell definitely whether an unsigned letter was written by a man or a woman. I could guess, of course, but in making an analysis the word 'guess' must be forgotten. Other things which cannot be told are: the age of the writer, his race or any variety of hocus-pocus about whether he will marry a blond or a brunette, be rich or poor, take a trip, have an illness and such."

There's much that can be told, however. And no guessing either.

I am a teacher

4. A young teacher wrote this. She has humor and imagination, but lacks initiative. She should wear dashingly colorful clothes to give her courage and bring out the latent social qualities.

For instance, if a young man writes, "I think so," with the "I" three times larger than the other two words, Miss Sara can and will tell him that he is a pretty good writer. If his handwriting slants backward, it indicates that his head rules his heart. If he cannot write on a straight line, he undoubtedly is subject to moods. Rounded handwriting usually means a sympathetic, glib nature.

Incidentally, it is not true that small writing indicates a small, petty nature. Or that a large scrawl means generosity.
