

O'Hara Uses Fingers And Knife for Brush, Spurns Usual Easel

Ferris Taylors, Who Were Tossed Ashore on Yacht in New England Hurricane, to Return To Indianapolis This Week-end.

By VIRGINIA MOORHEAD MANNON

Sophisticates in the Indiana Artists' Club who arranged for Eliot O'Hara's motion picture presentation and demonstration of water color technique last night probably knew he worked on the ground with whatever was handy. But to neophytes it was a distinct shock to find him poised at a 45-degree angle painting just as neatly with his finger and pocket knife as his brush.

The local premiere with personal appearance of the three O'Hara visual educational movies, made last year at Indiana University, played to a packed house at the John Herron Art Museum. Following the feature presentation the watercolorist painted a sunset over water "to order."

The O'Hara watercolor technique is based upon the same kind of free arm movement the Japanese attained by kneeling to paint. Mr. O'Hara makes a concession to comfort by sitting on a low folding stool and placing his paper on the floor before him.

He uses such labor saving methods as squashing his brush in the palm of his hand to do trees with leaves off in winter, tipping the brush to get a tree trunk and shadow at the same time and dipping his brush into the color unevenly to make a single stroke suffice for the light and dark side of leaves. To make branches he occasionally guides a wet drop of paint across the paper with his finger. The pocket knife comes into play when he wants to scratch lines in the paint to make a tree, scrape out some human figures or, perhaps, cut out wheels on a flat car.

Mr. O'Hara, who is giving a four weeks' water color course at the school, was made an honorary member of the club at a dinner given last night by the club officers and directors. Guests included Messrs. and Mesdames Gordon B. Hess, Wilbur D. Peat, Arthur Woodward, William Kaiser, Floyd Hopper and Ernest C. Ropkey, Mrs. Emma Sangernebo, the Misses Marie C. Todd, Belle Schofield and Flora Lauter, Donald Mattison, Louis Bonis of Ft. Wayne and Mr. and Mrs. John Richards and Mrs. Geraldine Armstrong Scott of Kokomo.

A Thrill-Filled Tale of the Hurricane

When Mr. and Mrs. Ferris Taylor return this week-end from what's left of Weekapaug Beach and Westerly, R. I., where they have been visiting relatives since Sept. 1, they'll have a thrill-filled tale to tell their friends.

The beach cottage of Mr. Taylor's sister, Miss Bessie Taylor, was blown away by the hurricane after the family had set out on Mr. Taylor's brother-in-law's sailing yacht.

Meanwhile, when the storm came up they had put the yacht into Stonington Harbor where, later, despite dropping two anchors, they were washed ashore high up in a field. The moist little band found a house still standing on the bank. They knocked and were admitted by a woman, alone in the house. Their nerves weren't steady any when the chimney blew down.

Another knock! The captain and crew of a potato boat sought shelter. Again a rap! This time a yacht owner who had been washed up on the beach.

When the Taylor family made their way back to Weekapaug Beach next day, they found a bare strip of sand where formerly a row of cottages had stood. One sock, one dress, one blouse and eight handkerchiefs were all they managed to salvage in their search along the beach.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Fortune, who are to go to Lake Maxinkuckee to spend the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Pierce Ward, will be guests at the wedding anniversary dinner Mr. and Mrs. Richard Edwards of Peru will give at their cottage tomorrow evening.
