Relics Worth Up to Million Dollars Piled Like Junk in State House Cellar

Verne Patty, State Museum Curator, inspects a stack of historic relics in the State House basement.

By NOBLE REED

The State of Indiana owns about 100,000 museum exhibits, estimated by State Curator Verne Patty to be worth about one million dollars.

But between 60,000 and 70,000 pieces are stacked like piles of junk and huge boxes in three locked storage rooms of the State House basement.

Many pieces, described as the rarest of their kind never have been seen by the public and never will unless space is found to display them, Mr. Patty said.

The only exhibits on display are scattered haphazardly in large glass cases along the corridors of the basement, overlooked by hundreds of passersby.

Many of the exhibits depict the mode of Indian living in this territory many years before the first white settlers arrived.

From that point on, the varied exhibits present a continuous picture of the ever-changing American scene of living, including everything from women's fashions 100 years ago to firearms and domestic animals.

The "largest hog in the world" is there in a giant glass cage, stuffed carefully to its original size. A 19th-century Egyptian king's palace, dated about 700 B. C., an inscription is still visible on the brick.

Another piece of stone about an inch square is believed to be the first "receipt" ever written. It is from an old Egyptian temple, and has tiny figures inscribed upon its surface.

The museum was started in 1870 when a group of Civil War soldiers brought their guns and swords to the State Library rooms for display.

Higher minimum wages than the new 30 cents an hour already have been established for the hosiery and textile industries by action of industry committees approved by the Wage and Hour Division Administrator.

Under the hours provision of the act, employees working more than 42 hours a week must be paid overtime at the rate of time and one-half the regular wage for any hours worked in excess of that number.

Indiana workers benefiting are part of an estimated total of 2,380,000 throughout the country, who are now working more than 42 hours a week. Wage increases will effect nationally an estimated 690,000 workers.

73,700 IN STATE BENEFIT UNDER 42-HOUR WEEK

4500 Will Receive Raise in Pay From 25 Cents to New 30-Cent Minimum.

Times Special

WASHINGTON, Oct. 23.—An estimated 73,700 industrial employees in Indiana will be affected by the new standard work-week of 42 hours, which replaces the 44-hour week, under the Federal wage-hour law beginning tonight.

The Indiana estimate was made today by the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor. Division officials also estimated 4500 Indiana workers will receive wage increases from 25 cents to the new minimum of 30 cents an hour.

Both the wage and hour changes are brought about under the automatic provisions of the act, which provides eventually for a 40-hour week at 40 cents an hour.

Hosiery Pay Up

Higher minimum wages than the new 30 cents an hour already have been established for the hosiery and textile industries by action of industry committees approved by the Wage and Hour Division Administrator.

Under the hours provision of the act, employees working more than 42 hours a week must be paid overtime at the rate of time and one-half the regular wage for any hours worked in excess of that number.

Indiana workers benefiting are part of an estimated total of 2,380,000 throughout the country, who are now working more than 42 hours a week. Wage increases will effect nationally an estimated 690,000 workers.

Fleming to Take Charge

Revised estimates of all workers covered by the act indicate that with increased employment over last year, a total of more than 12,000,000 are entitled to its benefits. Of these, 370,700 are in Indiana.

Lieut. Col. Philip Fleming, a trusted New Deal "trouble shooter," arrives today to take personal command of the revamped Wage-Hour Administration.

MUNCIE FLIERS NEARLY CRASH

Endurance Pilots Still Aloft After More Than 524 Hours in Air.

MUNCIE, Ind., Oct. 23 (U. P.).—Indiana's endurance fliers passed their 524th hour aloft today after overcoming high winds yesterday that made refueling contacts hazardous and once tossed the light plane within two feet of the ground.

The fliers, who will complete their fourth week aloft next Sunday, have passed the accepted endurance record of 345 hours and 46 minutes for light planes. They are approximately 70 hours behind two California pilots seeking the same mark and want to outlast the Westerners to gain the record.

Their narrow escape yesterday came during mid-afternoon when they were making contact with a gasoline truck. Red Luther, ground crew manager, said they were caught in a "thermal current" which dragged them "within 18 or 20 inches" of the ground with the wings of the plane perpendicular to the earth.

Luther said they narrowly missed the truck also when the plane lifted, but refueling was completed on their next circuit of the field.

P.).—With the endurance record for all-type planes only a few hours more than three days away, Clyde Schlepper and Wes Carroll cruised over Rosamond Dry Lake today confident they would establish a new mark. ## Gary Tin Plant Employs 256 Girls as Inspectors

GARY, Ind., Oct. 23.—Two hundred and fifty-six girls, selected for their sharp vision, spend eight hours a day, five days a week looking for defects in tin plate produced by workmen of the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp. here.

Girls are used for this work, plant officials said, because it has been found they catch metal faults more readily than do men. It was explained that the inspection work requires much of the same patience and dexterity necessary in several of the feminine arts.

Plant officials said that this group of girls is probably the largest of the type maintained in the industry. They are outfitted in green and white uniforms. Most of them are high school graduates and are between the ages of 23 and 25.

The first weeks on the job are spent watching the experienced girls work. They learn how to identify the various defects to be found in the plate.

They learn how to spot those defects which may be seen, those which may be felt and those plates which are either too thin or too thick. The recruits are under constant supervision. At the end of five or six months they rank as first-class inspectors.

The girls have their own recreation building, showers, lockers and parking spaces.

The tin they inspect is used for making food and beverage cans.
