JANE JORDAN

DEAR JANE JORDAN—I went with a fellow last summer and cared a great deal for him. We went together for a couple of months and then we drifted apart, or rather he drifted away. He would make dates and then stand me up. I have a car and we usually took it on dates. He always would drive it but as he is an excellent driver I didn't mind. Everyone told me that I was a fool to go with him as he only went with me for the car. He didn't have one. We enjoyed ourselves together and he told me he always would love me no matter what happened.

Still he quit coming over so I interested myself in other fellows. Our birthdays are two days apart and we made a bargain that no matter if we said up we would still celebrate our birthdays together. Both of us will be 20 at the end of this month. A little while ago he came over and asked me for a date on our birthdays. I told him I had a date for that night, which I did, and I hate to stand up the boy; so he said he would be seeing me and that was all. He goes by once in a while but never stops. I like him so much.

Answer—When a boy has proved over and over again that his interest in a girl is weak, to say the least, I believe that she should give up. Her persistence in hanging on is not so much due to the fact that she is really in love as to the fact that her pride simply will not admit defeat.

Take this young man for example. He made dates with you and failed to show up. If you had cut him off your list at this point, he would have had much more respect for you. As it is he knows he can treat you as he pleases without diminishing your regard for him. You do not demand consideration and hence do not get it.

If you break a date with another young man in order to keep a tryst with one who has consistently proved his unreliability, you ought to be spanked. What you need is more self-esteem. Where's your spunk?

DEAR JANE JORDAN—I am a young girl in high school. I met a boy in March. We went steady for four months and then one night he failed to come. From then on he would come in the day time and at night he said he met another girl. I don't know whether he said this to make me mad or not. When he sees me out in company he acts as if he has never met. He flirts with my girl friends. What can I do to get him to stop talking about other girls and come to see me?

Answer—Wouldn't it be nice if every girl knew exactly how to make a boy jump through when she wanted him to? Unfortunately it is not given to any individual to have this much power over another. All you can do is to make yourself as charming and agreeable as possible, and when he fails to treat you according to the recognized rules of courtesy and good breeding, give him the air.

The night he failed to come was the time for you to have put your back up and refused to see him again. This attitude would have forced him to eat a little dirt or let you alone. Instead you let him spend his days in telling you about his evenings with another girl. Surely you can find a boy with a more interesting line of conversation than this!

JANE JORDAN.

Support of State Merit System By Candidates for Legislature Is Reported by Voters League

The Indiana League of Women Voters today announced that early replies of prospective state legislators to questionnaires indicated "overwhelming support of the merit system in state government."

The results of the first returns were disclosed at the league's bi-monthly executive committee meeting yesterday at the home of Mrs. Clarence F. Merrill, president.

Mrs. Virginia M. Mannon, the league's administrative secretary, announced today that when more returns are received she plans to make "a Gallup type of analysis" of the opinions expressed on all the questions.

The questionnaire, said Mrs. Merrill, continued the league's policy of communicating with the candidates of both major parties, seeking expressions of opinion on subjects of public interest in which the Women Voters are especially concerned.

The state president said that responses from both Democratic and Republican candidates showed a very large number in favor of abolishing political spoils methods of selecting candidates.

Candidates Views Asked

Candidates also were questioned on their opinions on the City Manager form of government, on their views about the school attendance-child labor law and on the administration of poor relief.

Candidates also were asked to make suggestions "to expedite legislative procedure," to express themselves on trade barriers between states, and the protection "of those unfortunate children who become the objects of public concern through illegitimacy, appearance in juvenile court or the occasion for adoption."

Trends on these questions, however, were not disclosed by Mrs. Merrill.

The Indiana League of Women Voters will have its first fall program conference Sept. 11 in Lake County at a location to be announced later. Department, legislative, study group and publicity chairmen will attend.

The second of the fall conferences will be Sept. 18 at Spring Mill State Park.

Liquor Traffic Is Likened to 'Fifth Column'

CHICAGO, Aug. 9 (U. P.).—The Women's Christian Temperance Union meets today in 66th annual convention to organize a new anti-liquor crusade which its leaders said would be a "Temperance Foundation" under the national defense preparedness program.

Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, national president, predicted that within a few months legislation would be introduced into Congress to prohibit the sale of alcoholic beverage, just as the 18th constitutional amendment sponged the nation dry during the World War. She said that the W. C. T. U. would compress into the next year all the work done in 46 years before the World War for liquor restrictions.

In her opening address before the convention, Mrs. Smith likened liquor traffic to a "fifth column" boring from within and threatening our very rights as a free people.

"No nation eaten at the core by self-indulgence can long survive," she said. "God grant that the citizens of this nation may place in authority those who will 'promote the general welfare' by abolishing the liquor traffic and its attendant evils and lifting again the standard of clean and righteous government."

She said the W. C. T. U. undoubtedly would reaffirm its opposition to peace-time conscription and predicted that the Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill would be defeated in the Senate. She said the bill would be "the first step in the gradual taking away of the rights of the people under a free government."

She recommended that members "vote as we pray" in the November elections after studying the candidates and their platforms.

To "Widen" Windows

To make narrow windows appear wider, buy curtain rods some inches longer than the actual window width so that the curtains will fall over the wall as well as over the window. And don't skimp on curtain material. Full, ample folds of the right length for your window, give a luxurious effect.
