

NO LOOPHOLES IN ACT, HATCH WARNS

He's Awaiting Final Campaign Spending Reports, Then If It Was Violated He'll Take Action; Aware Now There Was Heavy Expense.

By BRUCE CATTON
Times Special Writer

WASHINGTON, Nov. 29.—Any campaign managers who thought they had found a set of loopholes in the Hatch Clean-Politics Act during the last few months, and acted accordingly, are going to have some soft words with Senator Hatch before they get through.

Senator Hatch, to be blunt, doesn't think there are any real loopholes in the act that bears his name, and he proposes to make a fuss about it if he finds that the law's spirit was violated.

Right now he's sitting tight. He wants to see the final reports of the House and Senate campaign investigating committees, headed by Representative Whittington and Senator Gillette. Then he wants to study the full financial reports of the Democratic and Republican national committees.

He doesn't of his own knowledge know whether his last campaign was, as Senator Gillette has remarked, the most expensive one ever held, but he is convinced there was some pretty heavy spending. "All those billboards I saw weren't put up free," he says. "Neither were those newspaper and magazine ads given away. And all that radio time wasn't donated."

The Hatch Act limits one party's campaign expenditures to $3,000,000. The supposed loophole opened up when somebody decided that limit applied to each individual political organization, so that if you could put half a dozen different outfits to work each one could spend up to $3,000,000.

Senator Hatch says that simply isn't so.

Individual's Help
"The act provides in substance, that all moneys expended by anyone with the knowledge of the national committee must be charged up as expenditures of the national committee itself," he says. "I wouldn't go to the extent of saying that if some ordinary mortal went out of his own hook and spent a little money to boost his candidate, his spending ought to be charged up to the committee. But where you have huge national organizations set up to do the same job as the national committee—and, in some cases, obviously split up just in order to avoid this limitation—I should say that the money they spend is clearly part of the national committee's expenditure."

"It's too thin for any national committee to say, 'Yes, here's a nation-wide organization spending money for our candidate in every state and precinct—but we don't know a thing about it.'"

Didn't Get The Money
All of this, of course, is chiefly a matter for the Republicans to worry about. Senator Gillette has remarked that officials of several of the assorted Willkie clubs told his committee frankly that their lawyers had advised them that each organization could spend up to the $3,000,000 limit.

The Democrats had a number of subsidiary clubs of their own, but most Washington observers doubt that they fractured the Hatch Act limit very badly—simply because it's doubtful that they were able to lay hands on the money.

Until it is known precisely what was spent, and by whom, it is impossible to say just what either Congress or the Administration may do.

"The main thought to hold in mind," says Senator Hatch, "is that there are inevitably going to be some violations and some loopholes in any brand-new law. This act is just beginning. We must strengthen it and improve it. More than anything else, though, there must be an educational process among the people so that they will demand better enforcement and higher standards."

CONTINENTAL ARMY'S BUDGET $3,000,000

WILMINGTON, Del., Nov. 29 (U. P.).—With Congress appropriating billions of dollars for national defense and the upkeep of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, few recall that America's first Continental Army had a budget of only $3,000,000.

When a group of Massachusetts farmers defied the British at Lexington, George Read, Continental Congressman from Delaware, blue-printed a budget for an army of 27,000 men and the necessary officers.

His estimate of the army's expense amounted to $3,000,000, with $2,276,000 for salaries and maintenance of men and officers and the remainder for war supplies.

The Read plan was adopted by the Continental Congress in November, 1775.

Read drew his budget on both sides of a piece of paper measuring only 7 1/2 by 12 inches.

TOWN LACKS JAIL
BADEN, Pa., Nov. 29 (U. P.).—The town of Baden—whose main claim to fame for the past 15 years has been that it has no jail—has dedicated a new $45,000 municipal building—without a jail cell.
