Give Hosiery as Christmas Gift
But Be Sure 'About' the Size

A GOOD, OLD STANDEY in the Christmas gift field is hosiery. Always acceptable, they may range from the finest gauge chiffon for evening to bulky socks for wear with ski boots.

This year the packages in which they may be given are clever enough almost to constitute gifts in themselves. Three pairs of stockings may arrive in a candlestick holder, a ballerina's slipper or in any of a variety of smart wrappings.

But be sure the hose are in the right size. The annoyance of having to exchange a gift takes away a lot of the fun of receiving it. The following charts will help in determining sizes for both men and women if you put in a little preliminary detective work on shoe sizes.

The Question Box

Q—How can I remove perspiration and odor from a garment?

A—Moisten the spot with clear water; then dip a clean cloth in cornstarch and rub it well into the stain. Allow it to dry and remove the starch with a stiff brush.

Q—What are the periphery nerves?

A—Those terminating in the periphery, which include the sense organs, the muscles and viscera, as opposed to the central nervous system.

Q—How can I prevent cauliflower from becoming discolored in cooking?

A—Cook it without a cover. It should never be cooked in an iron kettle.

Q—Is it true that the faster a child grows the more sleep he should have? How much sleep should a child of three have? How much for an active child of 12 and an adolescent of 16?

A—Studies made by the United States Children's Bureau indicate that a child grows most when asleep. A baby, less than a year old, grows very fast and sleeps most of the time. When he gets a little older he does not grow so fast and therefore does not need so much sleep. After about a dozen years, when the child enters the adolescent stage, growth speeds up again and the older boy or girl needs even more sleep than one a year or two younger. Many parents do not know this, and permit older children to stay up later than younger ones, with the result that boys and girls of 13 to 16 are often listless and inert. They may be sleepy and tired most of the time, or moody and irritable. A child of three should have 13 to 15 hours sleep, a child of 12 should have 10 to 11 hours and an adolescent should have 10 to 12 hours.

JANE JORDAN

DEAR JANE JORDAN—Although I have no romantic problems I read your column frequently and can't help noticing how many letters you get from girls wanting to know how to keep their boy friends interested. I don't pretend to be an authority on anything but I do know what more and more fellows, myself included, are looking for in a girl. We prefer a girl we're proud to be seen with. Too much rouge, mascara, nail lacquer, flashy jewelry, etc., aren't as attractive to us as some girls believe. Simplicity and smartness are inseparable. A liking for symphonic music, good books, the theater, art, can be acquired but not bought. A little consideration for others, including waitresses, salesgirls, doormen, and all who perform small, everyday services would boost any girl's stock with us.

In other words, if some of these girls would heed that advice, widen their horizon and concentrate on something besides their own interests, I feel sure they would find themselves sought out by boys who recognize and appreciate such things.

Answer—Girls have been told over and over that men do not like obvious make-up. Innumerable questionnaires have been passed out in colleges to collect the views of young men on their likes and dislikes on this subject and the majority has come out solidly against such things as over-done make-up, crazy hats, masculine attire, dirty saddle oxfords, and particularly long red finger nails.

More war has been waged over red finger nails than any other feminine foible. Men have compared them to claws dipped in blood and admit that they arouse their latent savagery. The red nails stand as a symbol of aggression against men which many women refuse either to admit or renounce. Their favorite alibi for the red nails is that they form part of the color scheme of a costume, like any other accessory. Like all alibis this one falls a little short of explaining a taste for deformity.

The last questionnaire I saw filled in by the members of a Purdue fraternity showed a unanimous wish for a girl with equal education, though the boys admitted that they preferred a girl with less education rather than more than that of the boy. A girl with more education, of course, is a threat to their masculine superiority. Nothing was said about symphonic music and I believe it is the unusual boy who appreciates it rather than the average.

In this questionnaire, 43 out of 45 boys declared themselves for absolute virtue in the woman they married. While willing to concede a little necking they clung to the puritanical ideal in a wife. In spite of the eloquent sales talk which a young man puts up in his attempt to break down resistance, his deepest desires still cluster around virtue.

In listing your requirements you mention manners and they are important. Not only men but the whole world admires gracious manners. Thoughtfulness and consideration for others, particularly those who serve us, endear a girl or a boy to one and all. A friendly, tolerant and courteous attitude is one of the greatest attractions any person can possess.

Perhaps the girls would like to come back with their idea of what constitutes an attractive man. Perhaps they would like a chance to tell what men do that antagonizes women. If so, the best letters will be published in this column.
