

2000 BOMBERS POUNDED RUHR

Dropped 6 Million Pounds
Of Explosives in Nine
Nights. London Says.

LONDON, June 20 (U. P.)—An estimated 2000 British bombers, in Britain's heaviest and most sustained aerial offensive of the war, have blasted and burned vital Nazi war industries with 6,000,000 pounds of high explosives and tens of thousands of incendiaries during the past nine nights, it was said authoritatively today.

Members of raiding bomber crews reported that great destruction had been heaped on the heavy industries of the rich Ruhr-Rhine area of Northwestern Germany, particularly at Cologne and Düsseldorf.

These two cities have been principal objectives of a majority of the attacks, just as they were in last night's.

Raging fires started by tens of thousands of incendiaries rained on industrial areas were said to have caused widespread damage.

Authoritative estimates were that 200 to 300 heavy bombers a night, a total of approximately 2000 in nine nights, had struck the sledge-hammer blows at the heart of German industry.

It was estimated they had hurled down 3000 tons of high explosives, probably including some of Britain's new super-bombs, in the offensive carried through nine nights without signs of abating. The number of incendiaries dropped was estimated at many tons of thousands.

The night offense has been supplemented by smashing daylight attacks against the "invasion" ports and supply depots on the Nazi-occupied coast of North France and against German shipping in the English Channel.
