Handle Speedy Craft Like
Veterans; Two of Them
Classed as Aces.

FIGHTER AIRBORNE NEAR
LONDON, Oct. 10 (Delayed).—American correspondents today visited the American Eagle squadron of the Royal Air Force and were treated by their fighting compatriots to one of the finest exhibitions of stunt flying they had ever seen.

Veterans by now, with many hours of hard-hitting action to their credit and a total bag of at least 23 German planes, the American boys took off in 12 cannon-firing Spitfires, circled the airfield in perfect line-astern formation and then proceeded to the staff air-drome.

For nearly a half hour they dove their three-ton machines down to within 20 feet of the assembled visitors, pulled out at 350 miles per hour and rocketed up into the sky to roll and dive again. It was too realistic to be pleasant.

Faces Change
To lend reality to the performance, four planes took off for France but found the weather too clear for a low flying attack and came back without the hoped for report of another German encounter.

This is not the same squadron we saw several months ago. Compared to the Spitfires in which the squadron now roams the skies, the Hurricanes it had then were like so many training planes.

Trained to trim by hundreds of hours of formation flying in fast machines and by hours of combat flying over France, the men handle their machines like the best veterans of the Royal Air Force.

Faces have changed during these months and two of those who have survived the battles over France now wear the DFC (Distinguished Flying Corps) the mark of the ace.

Object to Inaction.

About 20 former members of No. 71 squadron—the first of the Eagle squadrons which now exist—are no longer with it. A few have been transferred to other squadrons, some have gone home and nine have either been shot down or killed in flying accidents.

Inaction is the curse of the squadron and it has had a lot of it due to bad weather and difficulty in finding the enemy. On many of the fighter sweeps over France in which the squadron has participated, the Germans have taken advantage of the speed and climbing power of their new Messerschmitt 109-F's to elude the R. A. F.

When German fighters do engage them it is generally a question of one on one fighting. The one big taste of concentrated action which the squadron has had came on Sept. 7, when eight of its Spitfires ran into between 100 and 170 German fighters over Boulogne. Three Americans were shot down.

DALTON TRIAL NOV. 3
SALEM, Ind., Oct. 14 (U. P.).—Ed Dalton, 53-year-old Bedford hotelier, must stand trial Nov. 3 on a charge of clubbing to death John Hancock, 42, at Bedford July 27. The trial date was set in Washington Circuit Court yesterday.

Guest privileges obtained through a Cuban woman friend at the swank Havana country club for the reportedly pro-Nazi ex-President, later were canceled.

U. S. Supreme Court Denies 5 Pleas Affecting Hoosiers

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13 (U. P.).—The Supreme Court yesterday refused to review five cases which had Indiana "angles."

The conviction at South Bend of General Motors Corp. and three subsidiary firms on charges of violating the Federal anti-trust laws in the financing of auto sales.

The petition of William M. Bachelier, receiver for the Hoosier Veneer Co., Indianapolis, for review of a National Labor Relations Board order requiring the firm to bargain with the United Veneer and Lumber Workers Industrial Union.

A decision denying a claim by S. Nathan & Co. of New York for damages against the Frank Bird Transfer Co. of Indianapolis for $14,267 worth of jewelry lost when robbers held up a truck Sept. 30, 1936.

The petition of William Dudley Kelley, former leader of the Blue Shirts and erstwhile resident of Noblesville, Ind., for review of lower court decisions requiring his extradition from Washington to North Carolina to face court action on state security act charges.

The request of the Jehovah's Witnesses religious sect for review of litigation in which it seeks to prevent the application of the Indiana Anti-Riot Act to incidents involving its members at Connersville, Ind.

NLRB Charges Upheld
The General Motors case was by far the most important of the four. Yesterday's action virtually precludes any possibility of upsetting the jury verdict in that case.

The ruling also affects Chrysler and Ford, since those companies had entered into consent decrees along the lines of the General Motors verdict, which would have been changed if the G. M. conviction had been overruled.

Mr. Bachelier appealed the NLRB order against a previous receiver on the grounds that such action could not be brought against a company which was in state court receivership. He also denied that the firm or its officers had committed unfair labor practices, but the board's charges had been upheld by the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals.

The court refused to hear any one of three Jehovah's Witnesses cases. The other two originated at Belleville and Harrisburg, Ill.

A three-judge Federal District Court at Indianapolis had refused to issue the injunction requested by the Indiana members of the sect in connection with the Connersville disorder.

Two Convicted
In the summer of 1940, five members of the sect were arrested and two convicted at Connersville on charges of riotous conspiracy. Violence, allegedly at the hands of a mob, occurred at the time of the jury verdict. The convictions are pending before the Indiana Supreme Court on appeal.

Subsequently, a group of 75 members of the sect, residing at Connersville April 6, 1941, Palm Sunday, and were arrested going from house to house selling and distributing their religious literature.

They contended in briefs filed with the Supreme Court that they returned relying on advice of law enforcement officers that they would not be prosecuted. The three-judge court, in refusing to enjoin operation of the state law, held that in the light of previous occurrences the Jehovah's Witnesses "had reason to believe that trouble would be encountered."

STATE'S INCOME TAX

Hoosier Humorist Revealed as Congressional Record Fan

By DANIEL M. KIDNEY
Times Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—Maybe it takes a humorist to appreciate the Congressional Record.

At any rate, Rep. Louis Ludlow (D. Ind.) has found one who does and places the tribute paid this staid-looking publication in the Appendix of the Record.

The Appendix is the catch-all part of the Record, where Senators and Congressmen can toss anything and usually do. Rep. Ludlow expresses the hope that it will never undergo an "appendectomy."

A fellow Hoosier, Strickland Gillilan, is the humorist who maintains that sometimes the Record makes sense.

Mr. Gillilan first attracted nationwide attention for his wit when as a youthful newspaper reporter at Richmond, Ind., he wrote and published that comic poem about the terse report of the Irish section boss "Off again, on again, gone again, Finnigan."

Such terseness is not one of the outstanding features of the Congressional Record, although it costs the taxpayers $55 a page.

Terming the Record "the most potentially important periodical in America," Mr. Gillilan recommends reading it as a sort of cure-all as follows:

"Were that wordy pamphlet read regularly by even a tenth of the voters of this country, we would be out of half the trouble we are in, for the very reason that we'd never have got into it."

That it does have some faults he readily admits:

"To be sure, there is a lot of wordage that is of almost less than any importance."

"And among the addresses in the Appendix, where the extension of remarks is permitted to be printed, there is much extraneous matter."

"Some dotard playing for the old-woman vote of his District or State will have Aunt Minnie's recipe for branched peaches or cheese soufflé printed in the Record."

"But in the main, the thing is a distinct blessing, mistakenly disguised as a joke; and, for that very reason, a most costly joke."

Despite this defect, Mr. Gillilan concludes:

"Were the Congressional Record read every day by a fair proportion of our people, its cost would be a fine investment rather than the extravagance our neglect of our opportunities makes of it."
