Paul Revere's Job Was Easy Compared to That of Modern Air Raid Wardens

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28 (U. P.).—Paul Revere had it easy—all he had to do was keep his voice in fettle. His horse did the rest. Considering how simply the new England silversmith performed the task which won him immortality, far-reaching below. Take the situation in the District of Columbia. For weeks defense officials have been training the people to react appropriately to an air raid warning consisting of five short siren blasts at half-second intervals sounded three times. Unfortunately, they reckoned without their sirens. At first, defense authorities made shift with fire engine and police sirens for practice alarms. Too many persons didn't hear them. So 41 man-sized sirens, guaranteed to lift the hackles, were ordered at a cost of $42,000. But after 24 had been delivered and installed, the manufacturer declared publicly that no siren he ever heard could sound a signal that called for short blasts at half-second intervals. So delivery of the sirens was stopped.
