Red Cross Volunteers Complete 40,000 Garments for Armed Forces and War Victims

Approximately 40,000 garments have been finished in the past 18 months by Indianapolis women working as Red Cross volunteers, according to Mrs. Perry Lesh, director of volunteer services for the local chapter.

Records show that 35,000 "refugee garments" destined for final delivery to civilian victims of the war, have been shipped from here. A small stock was kept for use in Indianapolis and Marion County in case of a sudden disaster and approximately 5000 garments went to members of the armed forces.

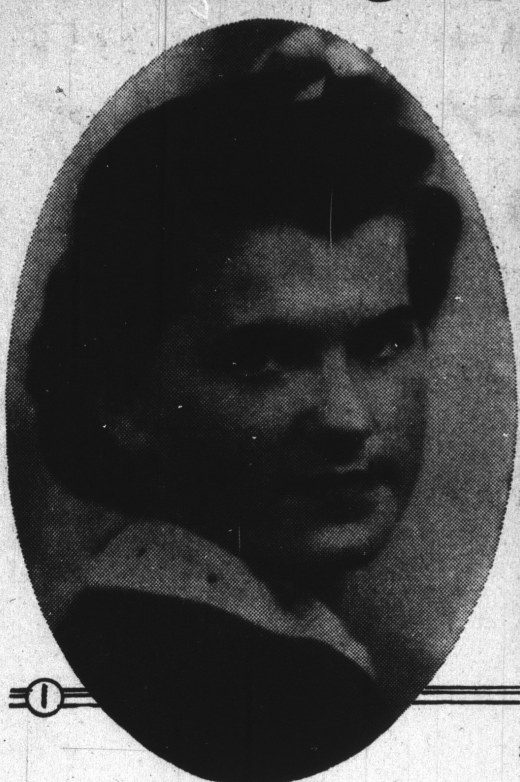

In connection with a quota allotted to the local chapter by national Red Cross Headquarters in Washington, Mrs. Frank Hoke, volunteer chairman of production, has announced that future precedence will be given to providing garments for the armed forces. The second responsibility will be to meet needs in connection with disaster relief of civilians and the third will be to continue to meet calls for garments from foreign countries.

Workers at headquarters inspect finished products and pack them for shipment.

Refugee garments which have been shipped include sweaters for men, women and children; hospital pajamas, layettes, woolen and cotton dresses for women and girls, boys' shirts, overalls and shorts, toddler packs and complete outfits. Mrs. Willis D. Gatch, volunteer
