Urges Nurses To Enlist for War Duties

A shortage of eight to nine thousand nurses in the number needed to serve the country's armed forces was pointed out this morning by Gertrude S. Banfield, R. N., Washington, to members of the Indiana State Nurses association in session at Ayres' auditorium.

Miss Banfield, assistant director of the American Red Cross nursing service in charge of enrollment for war service, said that since 1940 between 17 and 18 thousand nurses had been supplied to the army and navy but that the number was short, by eight or nine thousand, of meeting the estimated needs of the army alone at this time.

By June 30, 1943, she pointed out, the army will need almost twice as many nurses as at present on duty with the army nurse corps. Indiana, she said, has enrolled only about 19 per cent of a presumably eligible group available for duty.

Yesterday, speaking before the state Red Cross nursing committee, Miss Banfield recommended that a committee on supply and distribution of nurses function in Indiana to provide the state's quota of 80 nurses each month for the military forces.

The formal opening session of the association's 38th annual convention was a dinner last night in the chateau room of the Claypool hotel. Speakers were Gilbert Forbes, news analyst of WFBM, and Adrian Wychgel, J. H. deputy in the medical service, 5th regional civilian defense office, at Cleveland.

To Elect Officers

Mr. Wychgel replaced Dr. William S. Keller of the same office who was unable to be here because of illness. "Citizens will have to do without luxury nursing in hospitals," Mr. Wychgel said.

At a general session held at 2 p. m. today in Ayres' auditorium, Miss Olive M. Whitlock, R. N., associate public health nursing consultant with the U. S. public health service, was to speak on "Are Nurses Needed in Industry?"

She was expected to advocate the employment in industrial nursing of those women ineligible for military duty by reason of marriage or being above the age limit.

The closing business session of the convention at 3 p. m. was to be followed by a tea in Ayres' tea-room at 4:30 p. m. and a Halloween supper for industrial nurses at 5:30 p. m. under the sponsorship of the Indianapolis Industrial Nurses' club, at 1122 Circle Tower building.

Association officers to be voted upon during the convention were president, first and second vice presidents, secretary, treasurer and two directors. The polls were to close at 2 p. m. today.
