corrected until it issues other regulations in the future.

It said "limited personnel and budget" made it impossible to issue the other regulations at this time, a criticism of congress for cutting its 1944 budget.

The regulations issued today:

1. Established fixed mark-ups which wholesalers and retailers will apply to their buying costs and provided formulas for setting up maximum prices in the 17 states having state monopolies.

2. Announced formulas for setting maximum prices for sales of imported distilled spirits and wine by importers, including flat pricing of Cuban and Mexican gin.

3. Outlined general provisions which will apply to all sellers of distilled spirits and wines.

Other Rules Pending

Regulations still to be issued will cover:

1. Sales of bulk domestic spirits or wine by any person, and sales of bulk imported distilled spirits or wine by persons other than the importer.

2. Sales of packaged domestic spirits by processors.

3. Prices for certain services relating to the production of domestic distilled spirits and wine.

Number two of the regulations still to be issued is the one designed to eliminate the evasion of ceilings through the issuance of new brands.

important highway center between Catania and Taormina.

The British line curving around northward now embraces more than one-half of the base of Mt. Etna, the towering volcano which has a base 90 miles in circumference.

The German effort to form the new defense line between Cape Orlando and Taormina meant that under cover of fierce rear guard action in some sectors the Nazis were pulling out altogether from the Catanian mountains and even from the strategic slopes of Mt. Etna.

The new line was being drawn up with a long-shot hope of holding the highway just behind it, the last north-south road of any consequence still in axis hands.

Strong units of the Hermann Goering division had shifted up to the northern sector to strengthen the 29th German motorized division, which opposed the American 7th army.

kept a protective umbrella over northeastern Sicily and southern Italy, bombing highways, bridges, railroads and shipping while fighters poured cannon and machine gun fire into every kind of targets.

came close enough to scare anyone. We had hit them all before they even began to shoot.

"I don't know why they didn't pick us up sooner. We had them in a spot."

"We did not see a single barge or trooper. We stayed around there an hour and a half, mainly because we were having so much fun. We did not leave until every Jap ship had disappeared. None of them got away."

"The water was full of Japs—scores of them. Our own reconnaissance planes, flying in the general area, reported seeing four huge explosions in Vella Gulf at the time of any new Italian peace offer was known.

Observers in Stockholm speculated that Nazi fears of a military coup in Germany to overthrow Hitler, or a demand from the military for a guarantee that the Nazi party would cease interference in the prosecution of the war prompted the council at Hitler's headquarters, but they acknowledged that this might be wishful thinking.

led to speculation that they might confer soon with Premier Josef Stalin to clarify allied policy.

At 'Important Stage'

Wilson Broadbent, diplomatic correspondent of the London Daily Mail, said consultations among the British, American and Russian governments were "about to reach the final important stage."

With the allies smashing final resistance in Sicily and with vast areas of northern Italy's three most important industrial cities in ruins from Saturday night's air raids, London sources believed the stalling of the two-week-old Italian government of Marshal Pietro Badoglio may be nearing an end.

An Italian frontier report said thousands of anti-Badoglio pamphlets calling for a general strike beginning today as a protest against the government's failure to make peace were distributed in Milan, Turin and Genoa following the air raids.

An underground radio station identifying itself as "Free Milan" was heard broadcasting, "we must make peace straight away if we want to save ourselves. The people who succeeded in chasing Mussolini will rise again and chase Badoglio to obtain peace . . . either we make peace or we die!"

LONDON, Aug. 9 (U. P.)—Fritz Sauckel, Nazi manpower chief, told a Paris audience yesterday that he had seen Adolf Hitler in the last few days and had found him "composed, calm and full of confidence in final victory," the German official news agency reported.

Sauckel said that Germany was living through its greatest but hardest period. He blamed "Jewish propaganda" for reports that an internal German collapse was near.

Badoglio was reported to have offered to surrender if the allies would agree not to use Italy as a base for an attack on Germany. The allies presumably replied with an adamant demand for Italy's unconditional surrender. The nature of any new Italian peace offer was known.

Reports Vary

A wide variety of reports of business transacted or discussed at the Nazi conference reached London. Among them were:

1. Hitler sought to pressure Japanese ambassador Hiroshi Oshima, who attended, into persuading his government to attack Russia. Madrid heard that a neutral diplomat in France offered to wager that Japan would declare war on the Soviets within a week.

2. The conference ordered German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop to keep Italy fighting as long as possible to enable the Germans to prepare military positions in northern Italy and shorten defenses in the Balkans.

3. The military command proposed shortening the Russian front by a withdrawal to the Dnieper river line, or even farther west.

4. The conference entrusted the Nazi party with the task of strengthening home morale in the face of intensified allied bombing raids.

Goes to Italy

Italian frontier reports said that German Marshal Wilhelm Keitel, supreme commander of the German armed forces, went from the meeting to Verona in northern Italy to confer with high Italian army officials, presumably to inform them of how much aid Germany could provide should Italy remain in the war.

Keitel and the Italian officers also may have dealt with the replacement of Italian forces in Eritrea and the Balkans with German troops. Confirmation was said to have reached Bern that the Germans already were taking over from the Italians in southeastern France.

Ribbentrop and Italian Foreign Minister Raffaele Guariglia were understood to have gone to Verona following initial conferences in Rome, which Bern understood is to be declared an open city.
