

THURSDAY, OCT. 7, 1943

PAGE 18

Homemaking—

Spun Rayon Fabrics Win Popularity
In Fall Styles for the Junior Miss

FALL FROCKS FOR JUNIORS have appeared in models especially appropriate for this in-between age group who are too old for girls' dresses yet too young for sophisticated styles.

Simply cut but with tricky details and "itterbus" names that appeal to the schoolgirl, the frocks range from tailored shirt-and-skirt combinations to dress-up treatments casually styled.

Wool-type fabrics of spun rayon blended with other fibers are used in such varied weaves as flannel, twill, homespun and serge.

Gay plaid twills of spun rayon and wool are found in a two-piece frock called "cow-cow classic." The shirt blouse is man-tailored and the matching trouser-top skirt is made with center and side pleating and large slash pockets. Either garment may be obtained separately, to be worn with a plain color skirt or blouse—an economical way of extending the wardrobe.

Shirt-and-Skirt

FINELY TEXTURED flannel with a light cashmere band also is made into shirt-and-skirt outfits, in plain colors, checks and authenticated clan plaids. For one two-piece, checkered flannel makes the blouse front, and solid color is used for the blouse back, sleeves, bow and pleated skirt. This dress may be had in coral, aqua, toast or blue. Made entirely of Tattersall plaid is a button-down-the-back topper with collar and cuffs of white broadcloth and pleated skirt.

Separate models of inner-and-outer shirt and pleated skirt are combined. This pair comes in navy, brown, red, aqua, white and other colors.

Velveteen Trim

THE FLANNEL USED for a "junior Chesterfield" frock is full textured, highlighting the twill in the weave. Offered in pink, yellow, blue and white, the dress is a weave of spun rayon and spun acetate trimmed with velveteen collar and belt.

Serge weave is seen in a two-piece outfit, consisting of tuck-in shirt and skirt. Bright-colored felt bands applied on the skirt contrast effectively with the pastel color of the frock.

For a pinéière frock, named "boogie-lace," the fabric is dress-weight homespun in lively plaid pattern. Shoulder ruffles and white pique collar and cuffs, edged with piping, give a soft effect.

In weaves, colors, and styles, these spun rayon frocks offer the junior girl a selection that is not only suited to her age but is distinctive among fall models.

Auxiliary to Meet

The Indianapolis auxiliary to the Indiana Firemen's association will meet at 7:30 o'clock tonight in the Warren hotel. Mrs. Eunice Wilcox will preside.

Mrs. Paller to Talk

Mrs. Ben Paller will review "Hope Deferred" (Seitz) for members of Sigma Theta Tau sorority at 8 o'clock tonight in Hurty hall.

Fall Festival Opens Today at Church

An indoor fall festival will be held at the St. Francis de Sales Catholic church, 22d st. and Avondale pl., today through Saturday.

Mrs. J. A. Patterson is chairman of the luncheon committee which will serve sandwiches and chili today and Saturday and a fish fry tomorrow.

Mrs. Gilbert Kahn is chairman of a card party to be held at 2 p. m. tomorrow.

Recently elected officers of the Gamma Chi sorority are Miss Lucille Tatum, president; Mrs. Kenneth Oliver, vice president; Mrs. Edward Brown, treasurer, and Mrs. Ben Fellers and Mrs. Frank Clay, recording and corresponding secretaries.

His proclamation reads: "Every person in the union will observe this week. The object of American Art week is to publicize and advance the work of American artists and to bring the work of local artists before the public."

Other Thursday classes are archery, 7:30 p. m.; beginning ballroom dancing, 8:15 p. m., and square dancing at 9 p. m.

Name Officers

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.

First, its health counselors singled out girls who were over or underweight, or otherwise susceptible to illness, examined them and kept them under observation. Then the service instituted two series of lectures—one on health, delivered by military and civilian medical leaders; the other on "citizenship responsibilities," given by prominent citizens.

Other things adding up to a happier life for government girls include the signal corps' circulating library of donated books, a piano where the girls play and sing in their leisure time, leisure-hour language classes and resort information to help busy workers plan their vacations.

But signal corps is proudest, perhaps, of its work in cutting down absenteeism.