Civilian Food Prospects Show

Increase in Fish Supplies;

No Improvement in Poultry

NEW YORK, March 3 (U. P.).—A gradual improvement in fish supplies is indicated during March, but demand of the Lenten season undoubtedly will far exceed the quantities available.

Butter prospects for civilians hold a faint promise of betterment, but supplies of poultry, cheese, beef, veal and lamb may be shorter, according to the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co.

Ample supplies of coffee are promised for the pantry shelf. Potatoes, cabbage and spinach promise to be so plentiful this month that the government is urging distributors to use all possible means of getting them onto the tables of the consuming public. Even after government requirements have been met, eggs will be plentiful, not only this month, but for some time after that.

This is a "nutshell" version of the consumer food outlook was prepared from reports received from more than 140 field-buying offices of the food company.

Smoked meats will be about as plentiful as they were in February, with the exception of smoked ham. Little change is indicated in canned meats. There is little likelihood of greater quantities of corn-fed beef. The veal shortage will probably continue.

North Atlantic Improvement

The fish catch in the North Atlantic area should improve gradually, barring further labor troubles. A fair supply of haddock, scrod and flounders, can be expected. But other items normally available in this area—lobsters, sea scallops, smoked and salted fish and frozen fish of all types—will continue in very limited supply.

Fish production in the Chesapeake bay-Norfolk area should also improve as weather moderates. Spring shrimp production for the Gulf area, however, and halibut fishing in the Pacific area don't get under way until April. Florida fish production passes its peak in February, but there should be fair quantities of Spanish and king mackerel, bluefish, speckled trout and mullets this month.

Army Requisitions

Heavy requisitions of poultry for the armed forces will leave only limited quantities for civilian consumption and the scarce list will also include geese, ducks and turkeys.

The supply situation of green coffee improved during January and February. Although there are occasional shortages of some types of green coffee, there is a three months' supply of green coffee in the country.

The potato glut is rivalled by an abundance of lettuce. More peas will be on sale than for some time. Plenty of celery and green beans, and a fair showing of cauliflower, tomatoes, beets and escarole. However, the new onion crop will not meet consumer demand until the latter part of April, although scallions, shallots and chives will be available in reasonable quantities.

The fruit outlook does not compare too favorably with March of a year ago. Bananas, which recently reached the promising point of 40 per cent of normal supply, are now back at 15 per cent because of shipping conditions, but this situation is expected to improve by mid-March. Apples will be in smaller supply than March of last year and pears from South America are in view and some pineapples will be received from Cuba.
