

SWISS REFUSE TO QUIT LANDS

Goebbel's Scheme for Big Dam Is Opposed by Inhabitants.

By PAUL GHALI

Times Foreign Correspondent
BERN, March 17.—If there were judges in Potsdam in the 18th century, there are judges today in Coire, capital of the tiny Grison canton of Switzerland. In these words the Swiss press sums up a comparison of the situation in which Frederick the Great was once defeated by a miller who refused to sell his mill which stood in the middle of the Potsdam grounds, with that of 430 inhabitants of Rheinwald valley who, for more than two years had refused to be moved from their ancestral farms to make room for a dam.

In 1942 the inhabitants of three Rheinwald villages, Splügen, Medels and Nufenen, which lie in the remote Alpine valley in the Grison canton were requested by Swiss electrical concerns, supported by the Nazis, to leave their farms. They were offered such inducements as new farms, richer land, modern comfort and indemnities. But nothing could shake their attachment to the soil of their forefathers.

Politics intervened. The scheme for the Rheinwald dam was said to be the greatest achievement of Swiss electrical development. Finally Dr. Joseph Goebbel's himself, in one of his Das Reich articles accused the Swiss villagers of "stubborn resistance," which called for "efficacious means of action." Goebbel's concern in the matter was the need for as much electrical current as Germany can drain from her neighbors.

The Swiss villagers remained indifferent to the great Goebbel's. They finally won their battle. Three days ago the council of state of Grison canton decreed that no legal means in Switzerland could be applied against the inhabitants.

So far there is no reaction from the German side. But the Swiss press hails the courage and tenacity of its countrymen.

HARVESTER SETS RED CROSS PACE

A $20,450 contribution from the International Harvester Co. and $400 employees today set the pace for industrial groups in the Red Cross fund drive.

The $10,450 from the employees is better than the $3 per person average that must be maintained if the industrial division quota of $275,000 is met.

Walter J. Stuhldreher, chairman of the division, said that this first report should serve as an incentive for generosity on the part of others. The county goal for all divisions is $1,146,000.
