YOUR VICTORY GARDEN*Early Indoor Start Gives Head Lettuce Best Chance

By HENRY L. FREE
Scripps-Howard Star Writer

LETTUCE, with its many varieties, is the most popular plant for salads. To be tastiest it must be grown rapidly during the warm days and cool nights of late spring and early autumn. Hot weather produces plants which grow quickly.

A limed and well-drained soil, enriched with manure prior to sowing, is most satisfactory. Side dressings of ammonium sulfate for a month and then transplanted to the garden.

By that time the transplants are 4 to 5 inches high and if dipped in transplanted, will continue their growth without interruption. Transplant on a sunny day when the temperature is above 40 degrees and place a foot apart in rows. Recommended head lettuce varieties include Cosberg, 76 days to maturity from seed; Cosberg 600, 65 days; Iceberg, 84 days; New York No. 12, 80 days; Vaughn's Big Boston, 75 days, and Great Lakes, 75 days. The last is an All-America prize winner and considered the best hot weather head lettuce.

Transplanting Method

Lettuce just will not head up in hot June and July. Seed is sown in flats and in a sandy soil, transplanted to the cold frame when 2 to 3 inches high, spaced 2 to 3 inches apart, allowed to grow on
