24 West Washington StreetResignation of Eden Seen As British Criticize PolicyBy WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS
Staff-Howard Foreign Editor

LONDON, March 31.—Reports that Anthony Eden is about to resign as foreign secretary are understood to be true. He's expected to do so soon.

There is some difference of opinion about his reason. A considerable section of British opinion is convinced that he is not wholeheartedly in sympathy with his government's present foreign policy. Over here, as in the United States, there is mounting criticism of what some call Britain's "indecision."

The British went to war over a matter of principle, those people observe, which principle was broadly set forth in the Atlantic Charter. Now many are saying the charter and its principles seem to be slipping into the shadows and Mr. Eden doesn't like it.

Some of the things Secretary Eden is being heckled about in the press and in commons are the justice of Poland's claims to her 1839 boundaries over which Britain went to war; the justice of Russia's claims on Poland and on the Baltic states; the Italian problem; Yugoslavia and the Atlantic Charter.

Holding Two Posts

To some Mr. Eden gives an impression of not being too happy over the situation. These are some of the reasons why it is said Mr. Eden will soon leave the foreign office. But other equally good ones were set forth to me by one of the most experienced parliamentarians. Mr. Eden holds two of the most back-breaking jobs in the government as foreign minister and majority leader in the house of commons.

Either is a man's size task under wartime conditions. Another is that Eden is the heir presumptive to the British premiership. Apparently he is being groomed for that post. As Mr. Churchill most likely will remain at his post until the war is over, the main job of the man who succeeds him will not be foreign affairs but home affairs with which Mr. Eden thus far has had little to do.

Future Considered

It would be very helpful therefore if he were to take over some cabinet post which would help him later on, but which would allow him to remain as the leader in commons where he has made himself extremely popular. Unlike so many in America whose first thoughts seem to be to provide hot and cold running bathtubs for the people of Timbuktoo, here the emphasis is more on making Britain a better country to live in when Tommy comes home from the war.

Viscount Cranborne, I am reliably informed, will likely succeed Eden in the foreign office. He is now colonial secretary and leader of the house of lords. Only 50 years old, he has already had considerable experience in foreign affairs.
