College Boards Are in Action at Local Stores

At Ayres' college depot, (left to right, front row) Miss Jody Mick, the store's representative on its college board, and the 12 undergraduates who "give" with the lowdown on what the well-dressed campus belle will wear—Misses Sue Winkler, Joan Mawson, Jean Moore, Patia Maxwell, Patty Heustis, Margaret Sellmer, Ann Winger, Joan Bartley, Barbara Hudelson and Sue Hartz, and (at back, left and right) Marje Thoms and Patty Peterson.

Times Woman's Editor

ONCE UPON A TIME, the story goes, there was a poor, unsuspecting freshman who made her first appearance upon a college campus wearing an outfit that involved trailing veils and a femme fatale air. Her reception wasn't the social success she anticipated.

To prevent a recurrence of such an unhappy situation, someone thought up the idea of a panel of college girls who, from their own knowledge of school clothes and customs, could dish out some pointers for other girls about to invade the campus.

The college board was born and has come to be a standard feature at Indianapolis stores in the weeks that precede the fall openings of schools. At Block's and Ayres' this week the college boards got into action and that at Wasson's will be on deck next week.

Care Prolongs Swimsuit Life
Cotton swimsuits are popular this year and they come in a ravishing variety of colors and designs. To keep them looking trim, however, requires a little extra care. It pays to give them a soap and water wash after each wearing to remove sand and smears of sun-tan lotions.

Use moderately warm suds, and rinse in several clear cool waters. If the suits cannot be washed as soon as they are brought home, be sure to hang them to dry anyhow. If they are left in a heap, mildew may set in and ruin the looks of the garment. It is almost impossible to remove mildew stains, but easy to avoid them.

With proper care a swim suit should be good for several seasons. The longer it lasts the better, for conservation is today's watchword.

Heat Discolors White Hair

"WHAT CAN YOU do for gray hair," asks a reader, "that emerges from a permanent a sickly yellow?"

That discoloration caused by heat, to which some snowy crests are particularly susceptible—and to the heat of the sun and hair driers as well—can be canceled out, if you'll use bluing rinses with a violet undertone.

But it's always wise to make a color test on an obscure strand of hair before submerging the whole head in a blue-violet rinse. Otherwise you may come out with an unexpected color—this time pink.

WHEN YOU'VE tested out the strength of your color rinses and have hit upon a shade that suits you, make up your mind to watch out for the yellow hazard in the future.

Next time you get a permanent, see that an oil solution—not acids—are used; a minimum amount of heat is applied; metal rods are wrapped with cellophane or some other protective shield that keeps your hair safe from metallic stains.

Don't expose your hair to the sun. Ask your beauty shop operator to breeze it dry with a hand blower; not with a heated helmet.
