

Janet Blair Sues Columbia Again

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 1 (U. P.)—Janet Blair, comedy film star, yesterday filed a new suit in superior court to break her contract with Columbia Pictures Corp., charging the studios with fraud.

Superior Judge Joseph W. Vickers decided July 12 her contract contained so much to her advantage that she suffered no damage. But Miss Blair said the first suit was "only a preliminary but necessary legal skirmish."

The actress contends the studio withheld "all information of a 'secret' contract made with her former agent, Alex. Holden, giving him a 'cut' of her salary, a cut she said she learned about only at the time of Holden's death."

Dragon Seed At Loew's

Excellent Picture Tells a Story Of China.

After seeing "Dragon Seed," which opened at Loew's yesterday, a possible reaction might be to run right home and write your congressman about aid to China.

Katherine Hepburn, much maligned at times on the charge of overacting in the manner grand, has two chances to really let go of herself, but she plays both scenes with restraint and effectiveness.

All the credit certainly does not go to Miss Hepburn. Aline MacMahon and Walter Huston represent the older generation of China. Around the family group is built a story which tells of peaceful and ill-equipped people who rise against the invader with quiet stubbornness.

Pearl Buck, the author, has a knack for writing about a few people and a small bit of land and making it represent an entire people and half a continent.

The story itself is about a young Chinese girl who has a thirst for knowledge and the enlightenment of her people. She convinces her husband and in turn, when invasion and war follow, she convinces, through him, their neighbors.

Hysterical heroics are not a part of "Dragon Seed," but there are some ugly scenes. When the first Jap troops come to the community the family is victimized by brutality of the enemy. Over-night they remove themselves from centuries of peace and kindness to an active defense of their "good earth."

Whole factories are moved on the backs of men. Farmers who have tilled their land handed down for generations display only a momentary reluctance in burning and destroying everything they own rather than give aid to the Japanese. It is a fine picture. (By John Chadwick.)

REPORT SULFA NO AID TO POLIO

Doctor Asserts Penicillin Also Useless in Treatment.

CHICAGO, Sept. 1 (U. P.)—The sulfonamide drugs are of no value in treating infantile paralysis, and physicians should be warned against their use for this purpose, Dr. John A. Toomey, Cleveland, said today in an article in the journal of the American Medical Association.

Toomey wrote that in a recent "explosive epidemic" of poliomyelitis in a small northern Ohio town, the number of patients that developed severe paralysis seemed out of proportion to the normal expectancy.

"Most of these patients had received sulfonamide drugs," the doctor said he was told.

Study Penicillin

Advising that the sulfa drugs have no value in poliomyelitis, Toomey added "nor does penicillin help much in our experience, although we have not noticed that it does harm."

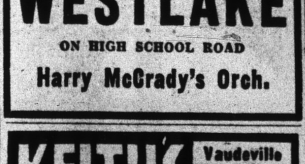

In another article, however, the journal reported that penicillin had been used successfully in the treatment of a type of sinus infection which until a year ago was universally fatal.

Dr. W. M. Nicholson and Dr. W. B. Anderson, Durham, S. C., said that a farmer treated with penicillin was discharged from the hospital 28 days after admission, although sulfadiazene treatment previously had failed.
