GROUP PERPETUATES ANCIENT CARD GAME

HINGHAM, Mass. (U. P.)—Probably the least played game in the United States is a 200-year-old Spanish card game still played once each week by a group of Hingham businessmen.

It's called ombre and was handed down from the great-grandfather of one of the present players. The game dates back to the 15th century, and takes its name from the word el hombre, or the man who plays a lone hand up to a certain point.

The game is so complicated that only a handful of persons know the rules well enough to play.
