JANE JORDAN

DEAR JANE JORDAN—I'm 20 years old and since high school I have had to take over the responsibility of a sick mother, young brother and sister. I wouldn't mind if I could be happy together. My sister of 17 who is beautiful, has a personality and everything a girl could want, loves to remind me how plain I am, and dumb, too. At first I let it pass but lately I think I am losing my mind. I wake up in cold sweats at night, crying so hard I can't breathe. It hurts to have my sister ashamed of me because I work in a dirty factory and have dirty hands but I had to give up my education to support my family. After father deserted us it was a long time before I could trust anyone until one day a boy came along and I broke down and put all my faith in him. Then my pretty sister turned on the personality and you know what happened. She did it just to show me up, she said. He's overseas now and writes me occasionally which gives my sister much merriment. Why do I have to live as I do and take what I do? I've given up everything to take care of my little family which I love.

MICHAEL

Answer—You don't have to live as you live or take what you take. You're cowed by your sister. Let go of your anger and tell her off instead of crying it out alone at night. It is your pent up anger that is doing you in. Let fly and say all you feel. What would she do without your support with your dirty hands in a dirty factory? Demand that she make some of the sacrifices and help ease the living.

Of course there'll be a family blow up and everyone will have a good cry but they'll end up with more respect for you and a wholesome
