

HECKLER AND HIS FRIENDS

JANE JORDAN

DEAR JANE JORDAN - I have been going with a fellow for two years. We like the same things and have lots of fun together. He is going in the service soon and prefers that I do not write to him. Then when all this is over, if I still have waited for him we can continue where we left off. He doesn't believe that a girl can wait for a fellow without running around. He expects to come to my home at any time and find me waiting, no matter what time he gets here. He runs around with single fellows and doesn't really want to settle down.

Answer - I think you have him analysed correctly. If he were in love with you he would want your letters as much as you want his, and both of you would wait for each other happily. How foolish you would be to agree to sit around and wait for a man who doesn't even write! Perhaps fidelity on his terms is impossible. Love has to be given as well as received to insure the kind of exclusive love he craves.

DEAR JANE JORDAN - I am a girl of 20 and have a year-old baby.

My husband is in the navy. Before he went into the service he was a perfect husband and loved me and the baby very much, but navy life has changed him quite a lot. In his last letter he said he had met a girl on the East coast and fallen in love with her. He asked me what he should do. I've been very true to him, stayed at home, saved and planned a future for us. Even his parents say I am a devoted wife, perfect housekeeper and good mother. I have written him a letter every night since he has been away. What should I tell him?

Answer - Tell him to wait until he comes home and see you and the baby again. Tell him that war and loneliness often play havoc with the emotions and since there always is more than one woman whom a man can love, it is easy to become confused. Convince him that it would not be fair for the baby to break up your marriage until it has had another trial. In other words, stall for time, and the whole thing may blow over.

JANE JORDAN.
