

JANE JORDAN

DEAR JANE JORDAN—I want to have a party but my mother says I am too slow, and that if I hurry I do everything wrong and have to do it over. Well, it goes like that from morning until night. I do so much about a dog and she promised me one but backed out. When I talk about it she says "You wouldn't take care of it." How does she know? I never had one. At times I don't think my mother really cares for me. Most of my girl friends have mothers who kiss them good night of their own accord. If they came in late their mothers worry about them. But do these things? No! If my mother knows that affection is what it takes to make teen age kids happy she ignores it, and if she doesn't know it, I will somehow let her know. Can you tell me how?

Jane Jordan
SLOW POKE.

Answer—Your mother probably would be astounded if she knew you thought she did not love you. In many ways she is rather typical parent, absorbed in adult affairs, with her teens so far behind she forgets the aches and pains of the period. Like many parents she expects adult performance from her daughter and is not very patient with the faulty performance of the young who try and fail and try again. Lucky is the girl whose mother is tolerant with her efforts to help and to assume responsibility, and who is satisfied with gradual improvement. Very likely your mother isn't a very demonstrative person and not given to kissing. You'll just have to come right out and tell her how you feel. She isn't very intuitive and certainly isn't a mind reader. Ask for a chance to prove that you would take care of a dog, and tell her that it is good training for you. Ask her to be more patient with your slowness, and tell

SLOW POKE.

NOTE—I have many other letters from young people. In order to answer as many as possible, I will be brief. Within a few days I will devote a whole column to answering teen-age questions.

Worried is a boy of 16 whose girl friend talks about other boys but won't let him talk about other girls. Should he make her jealous? Yes, if it amuses him to do so. A better plan is to ignore the whole business and not be so jealous himself.

Puzzled but Hopeful is 15 and her father has forbidden her to see her "steady again" because of her youth. She sees him secretly but is afraid of being caught. If she is caught she must be respectful but courageous and tell her parents that if the fruit isn't forbidden it isn't so attractive. The same advice applies to Margie who is 16, secretly going with a boy 16. The boy is a bit young for her, but what of it since their friendship need not be permanent. A Steady Reader is in the same situation, motherless, keeping house for her father who doesn't know she has a boy friend. It is time she had things out with her father, even though it does make him angry. He can't keep her with him forever.—JANE JORDAN.
