

BARNABY

JANE JORDAN

DEAR JANE JORDAN—My husband's relatives are my problem. Mamma is dictator. He listens to everything she says; so do the other children. I'm left out in the cold. None of the relatives lives here. My mother-in-law tells tales in her letters, but even though she was the one who told the story, I am the one who is blamed. He goes home for a visit and everything is hashed over, including me. I can tell I'm in for trouble when I see him coming. Since I'm not wrong, I usually prove myself clear, but just the same it caused trouble. My husband all ways has been a weakling who just falls for everything. I'm sorry to say, I can't think of anything that's worse than always being on the spot, always having to prove something that I hate to tear up my home. Still I have no happiness. I'm tired of having to fight for everything. Can a woman ever come out ahead? There's no reason for all this, but it's the truth.

Answer—Consider the duck, how he lets the water roll off his back. He may quack but he swims along just the same. Why let this enormous mass of trivia get you down? Quack if you must but don't quit. It's your good fortune that these people live out of town. You don't have them with you day after day. There's a way of handling the disturbances that cause without getting emotionally involved. Cultivate indifference. Grow a neat little
