WRITERS GIVEN
HONOR MEDALS

Two Newspapers and One
Magazine Also Praised.

COLUMBIA, Mo., May 11 (U. P.)—Honor medals for distinguished service to journalism were presented by the University of Missouri today to three newspapermen, two newsmen and one periodical.

Dean Luther Mott of the school of journalism presented the medals as a part of the 36th annual journalism week observance.

Receiving honors were state Senator William E. Freeland of Forsyth, Mo.; editor and publisher of the Taney County Republican; Foster B. Hailey, editorial writer for the New York Times; Robert J. Casey of the Chicago Daily News.

Newspapers honored were the Washington Post, whose medal was received by Mrs. Agnes E. Meyer, co-publisher, and the London Daily Express, which was represented by C. V. R. Thompson, its chief American correspondent.

Frederick Lewis Allen, editor of Harper's magazine, accepted the honor for his publication.

Washington Post Cited

The Washington Post was cited in recognition of its "interesting history of nearly 70 years . . . its original contributions to the investigation and study of contemporary American problems; and its clear presentation . . . of the news of the world with proper interpretation and comment."

The London Daily Express was recognized for its "dynamic display of news . . . its admirable example in the field of architecture for newspaper plants; its supremacy in circulation among all daily newspapers . . . and its sympathetic relations with American journalism."

Notable Editing

For his "long career as a brilliant reporter in virtually all the fields of news and features," Robert J. Casey was honored.

Hailey was recognized for his "notable work in editing and management of news reports . . . for his achievement as war correspondent in the Pacific area; and for his notable work in authorship and as editorial writer for the New York Times."

Freeland was honored for his "long and successful life as editor and publisher of Missouri weekly papers; his devotion to the highest ideals of journalism and community welfare."

Front Line Looters Wreck
Priceless Enemy Articles

By WILLIAM H. STONEMAN
Times Foreign Correspondent
WITH THE U. S. 3D ARMY,

May 11—Millions of dollars worth of rare things varying from intricate Zeiss lenses to butter and cheese and beautiful automobiles are being destroyed because the army has not organized a system for the recovery of valuable enemy material.

Front line troops are rough and ready about enemy property. take what they find if it looks interesting and because they are in the front lines nobody says anything. There are no M. P.'s in the front lines.

But what front-line troops take is nothing compared to the damage caused by the wanton vandalism of some of the following troops, who seem to ruin everything including the simplest personal belongings of the people in whose houses they are billeted.

Priceless Items Shattered

Today, we have had two more examples of this business which would bring tears to the eyes of anybody who has any appreciation of material values.

First, we found two box cars absolutely loaded with magnificent Zeiss range-finders for ack-ack guns, thousands of rare lenses worth, at rough estimate, perhaps $1,000,000. Most of the things we saw there—many of them scattered about the tracks—were priceless, and thousands of dollars worth of stud had been shattered as G. I.'s combed box cars for binoculars and other items which appeared easy to sell.

Anybody with any knowledge of precision instruments would have cried his eyes out to see instruments worth $500 or $1,000 scattered around like so much junk.

Warehouse Like Pigsty

Later, we visited a warehouse and it was like a pigsty. There were still thousands of yards of printed cotton goods and artificial wool goods lying around, but much more had been looted by somebody or other. All these things are going to be needed by our allies before another winter comes and it is a crying shame that nobody made provision for protecting them.

We have certainly enough officers around the American front today, doing nothing, to allow organization of a group to take charge of and protect these things which we will soon need. We, as an old looter, would be ashamed to let so much go to waste with so little effort.
