

Patton's Psychology of Fear Revealed in Poem He Wrote

Dr. Gen. George S. Patton, one of the best known and most courageous commanders in the armed forces of the United Nations, today was the author of a poem "Fear."

Written while the forces in his command were sweeping irresistably across Germany, Gen. Patton's poem appears in print for the first time in the May issue of Cosmopolitan magazine. The poem follows:

FEAR

I am that dreadful, blighting thing,
Like ratholes to the flood,
Like rust that gnaws the faultless blade,
Like microbes to the blood.

I know no mercy and no ruth,
The young I blight, the old I slay.
Regret stalks darkly in my wake
And ignominy dogs my way.

Sometimes in virtuous garb I rove,
With facile talk of easier way,
Seducing, where I dare not rape,
Young manhood from its honor's sway.

Again in awesome guise I rush
Stupendous, through the ranks of war,
Turning to water with my gaze,
Hearts that before no foe could awe.

The maiden who has strayed from right,
To me must pay the meed of shame,
The patriot who betrayed his trust,
To me must own his tarnished name.

I spare no class, or cult, or creed,
My course is endless through the year.
I bow all heads, and break all hearts,
All owe me homage—I am FEAR!

Beau Brummels Of Sea Indignant

WASHINGTON, May 10 (U. P.) — The coast guard told the sad story today of a coast-guard manned transport in the Pacific whose crew no longer can be listed among the best dressed.

A few weeks ago, the men bought new dungarees at ship store lockers. When they put them on, however, they noticed an unfamiliar roominess about the hips.

Then they discovered the awful truth.

The dungarees were designed for SPARS and WAVES. Confronted with a shortage of dungarees for men, the women's apparel had been sent to ship stores.

The men upon the unidentified transport now are wearing their old dungarees. The demand for new dungarees has dropped.
