an edict by the new government forbidding all public meetings. Damaskinos swore in the Sophoulis government shortly after midnight and then announced he had resigned as regent. He said he resigned because he considered that King George had abolished office of regent by a statement issued in London.
The royalists were angered by the Sophoulis government's plan to postpone the plebiscite on the return of King George for three years. King George, in London, said it meant the stifling of true Greek sentiment.

'Slave Laborers' in Japan Stage Riot

TOKYO, Nov. 22 (U. P.).—Dispatches from Akahia Amachi, a coal mining town on Hokkaido, said today that American military authorities and Japanese police broke up a riot between 800 Chinese and 1500 Korean "slave laborers," imported during the war by the Japanese.
The Jiji news service said scores of persons were injured and one Chinese was killed in the rioting. The fighting was reported to have broken out last night when Chinese attacked a group of Koreans at a theatrical performance.

Col. H. J. Ballard, Salt Lake city, an official of the 8th army's military government section, said last week that remaining "slave laborers" in the huge Hokkaido coal mines had caused an 80 per cent slowdown of normal production in October.

Ballard announced that arrangements already had been made to replace these laborers with Japanese miners and that the Chinese and Koreans would be repatriated at the rate of 1000 per day.

was to train troops to fight against the Japanese.

Ironically, it was on this tour of domestic duty that the man who had survived action in both the Pacific and in Europe was stricken down.

Last September, he was named chairman of a board to reorganize America's post-war army.

Born at Ft. Huachuca, Ariz., the son of Capt. A. M. Patch, he was trained for an army career from youth. He attended St. Luke's preparatory school near Philadelphia, and Lehigh university, before he was appointed to the U. S. military academy at West Point in 1908.

Served in Pacific
He served along the Mexican border, fought with the 1st infantry division in the first world war and participated in the occupation of Germany in 1918.

Promoted to brigadier general in August, 1941, Patch first saw action in world war II when he directed American forces which occupied New Caledonia. After the marine had secured a beachhead on Guadalcanal, Patch led the army forces into the "canal" and led both marines and doughboys to the first great American victory in the Pacific.

Recalled to the United States, Patch commanded the 4th army corps from May, 1943, to March, 1944, directing the training of 100,000 men for the fighting in Europe. He was placed in command of the U. S. 7th army on March 1, 1944 and flew to Italy where he planned and led the opening of the "third front" in southern France.

Received Many Honors
His forces fought up the Rhine river to the Vosges mountains and, with the capture of Strasbourg, breached the Siegfried line. His forces drove into southern Germany in the final days of allied victory, crossing the Rhine last March 26.

Numerous honors were accorded Patch, including the decoration by Gen. Charles De Gaulle with the Croix De Guerre with palm and the rank of commander of the Legion of Honor. He also won the army distinguished service medal and the oak leaf cluster and the navy distinguished service medal.

tion trial if he is returned to Germany against his will.

Bauer arrived in New York from Spain Aug. 24, 1941. He enlisted the following May in the U. S. army and was assigned to Ft. Knox, Ky. Later he became photographer at Ft. Harrison where he remained for three years.

Wife Still Keeps Faith
Throughout the recent joint army-FBI probe, Mrs. Bauer has adamantly refused to believe her husband could have been guilty of subversive activities. She appealed to congressmen, army officers, President Truman and every possible source in an effort to bring the much-delayed case to a climax.

Today, she said she intends to take him some candy bars and books. Recently she has been permitted to visit him for 15 minutes a week.
