Courage, Serenity Called Blood Pressure Medicine

By Science Service
BUFFALO, Oct. 3.—You can have a high blood pressure and live a long life, Dr. Hugh J. Morgan and

Dr. Laurence A. Grossman, of Vanderbilt University School of Medicine, declared at the centennial celebration of the University of Buffalo here.

Courage, serenity and optimism are the best medicines for the patient with high blood pressure, they believe.

They emphasized the importance of treating the patient, rather than the disease. In the vast majority of cases, they stated, the cause of the high blood pressure cannot be located and removed. Most students of the problem, they pointed out, are opposed to drugs prescribed specifically for reducing the blood pressure.

Drugs from potassium thiocyanate to extracts of mistletoe, garlic and watermelon seed are included in the ban because those which do lower the blood pressure are either poisonous when given continuously or have a passing effect and are not suited for prolonged use.

The doctors are equally unenthusiastic about diets, gland therapy and physiotherapy. Psychiatric which aims at relieving tension and fears and developing confidence may help the patient live with his high blood pressure.

Rest is still a good remedy for patients with heart trouble, Dr. Robert L. Levy of New York declared. He took issue with the recent fashion of criticizing rest as a remedy. Like any other drug, it may be given in doses that are neither too large nor too small, but prescribed for each patient.
