YOUR G.I. RIGHTS... By Douglas Larsen

Bureau Moves to Speed College Subsistence Checks

WASHINGTON, Oct. 7.—The important last-minute arrangements they had to make to enter college this fall under the GI bill of rights are worrying thousands of veterans, many of whom have only enough cash to get started and need quick delivery of their government subsistence checks.

Many, too, still have important questions to ask the Veterans' Administration.

To iron out these last-minute wrinkles for veterans, answer their important questions and get the first checks to them 30 days after they entered school, VA is working overtime and sending special registration teams to many of the nation's colleges and universities.

Work With Schools

The goal is to work closely with school officials to complete VA forms and to gather the information necessary to put veterans on subsistence rolls promptly.

In order to speed VA's tremendous job, veterans are asked to help in the following manner:

If the veteran has entered a school for the first time under the GI bill, he must be sure to have his certificate of eligibility with him. He must be sure that the institution he entered is approved for furnishing government-financed education.

If he has entered a school other than the one he attended last year, he should have with him a supplemental certificate from the regional office that handled his case.

Delays May Arise

Any change of address must be reported to VA promptly. If the veteran is not at his old address to claim his check, it may be returned to the treasury department and he may have to wait some time to receive it.

VA warns, however, that where the influx of students is greatest delays may be unavoidable. Neither VA nor the schools can hire and train enough employees to meet every demand.

VA reminds veterans that they must be in school 30 days before they are eligible for the allowance.
