Sea Wave Warning Service Planned by Coast Survey

By Science Service
WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—A warning service, to save lives and minimize property damage from earthquake-caused sea waves, is now being planned by the U. S. coast and geodetic survey.
It will have its principal headquarters in Honolulu, with additional seismological observatories at Sitka and College, Alaska, and at Tucson, Ariz.
Great sea waves, like the one that drowned 140 people in Hawaii last April, are caused by certain kinds of submarine earthquakes. The exact mechanism of their inception, however, is not yet understood, states Cmdr. Elliott B. Roberts, chief of the division of geomagnetism and seismology of the survey, so that simply locating a submarine epicenter is not sufficient basis for predicting a sea wave.
However, prompt location of epicenters is very important, so it is planned to attach alarm devices to seismographs, so that they will give notice the moment they begin to operate. It is also planned to set out newly invented wave detectors, to give notice of abnormal movements in the water near the sea waves' points of origin.
Observation of abnormal behavior on the part of the sea among the Aleutian islands or along the upper coasts of Alaska can be made, however, by properly located watchmen, including coast guard personnel. Radio warnings of a sea wave thus caught in the act of getting started can be sent by army and navy radio, so that people on threatened coasts can get to safe places, taking valuable portable property with them.

Since sea waves travel at an amazingly high speed, traversing the distance from the Aleutians to Hawaii in as little as five or six hours, it will be necessary to have all the warning service set-up constantly on the alert and ready to function smoothly and with the utmost possible quickness.
Since this is a pioneering effort, it will probably require several months to give observers the necessary special training, as well as to get the interdepartmental communications system into good running

HYBRID PLOT DISPLAY RESULTS ANNOUNCED

H. E. Abbott, Marion county agricultural agent, today announced the results of the annual Marion county hybrid variety demonstration plots.
Indiana certified 813 yielded 137 bushels to the acre, topping the other 15 varieties tested. Another closed pedigree hybrid, M-13, ranked second with a yield of 125.8 bushels to the acre. Purdue experimental variety 2814, yielding 124 bushels, was third.
The yield was high, compared to other demonstrations in the past few years. Favorable factors were high soil productivity of the farm and dry weather conditions. Moisture content of all varieties was extremely high because of seasonal influences.
The plots, planted June 3, were harvested Nov. 2. This year's testing was done on the Frank farm in Pike township.
