

C.O.P. Leaders Map Plans To Throw Bilbo Out Of Senate

Committee Says Actions Were Improper

Expect Decision on Ouster Tactics Today

BULLETIN

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2 (U. P.).—The senate Republican policy committee decided formally today to try to prevent Senator Theodore G. Bilbo (D. Miss.) from taking his seat when congress convenes tomorrow.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2 (U. P.).—The stormy political life of Senator Theodore G. Bilbo (D. Miss.) teetered in the balance today. Republican leaders mapped final strategy for their fight to throw him out of the senate.

They were armed with a bi-partisan senate committee report formally charging Senator Bilbo with "improper" conduct in dealing with war contractors whom he helped get government building jobs.

The Republican policy committee, headed by Senator Robert A. Taft (R. O.), scheduled a meeting today to reach a final decision on the course of action to be recommended to the senate Republican conference this afternoon.

Double Filibuster

After a session yesterday, Senator Taft reported that a majority of the committee favored challenging Senator Bilbo's seat before he can take his oath when congress convenes tomorrow. That strategy might invite a filibuster by Bilbo supporters and delay organization of the senate. Senator Taft, however, doubted that a filibuster would develop.

Senator Taft noted that a simple majority would suffice to deny Senator Bilbo his seat, whereas a two-thirds vote would be required if ouster proceedings were started after Senator Bilbo were seated.

Since Senator Bilbo would be the second of newly elected senators to take the oath, Democrats would hold a 30 to 29 majority when and if he should be asked to step aside. But the Republicans were depending on some support from Democrats.

Charge 'Personal Gain'

The improper conduct charge was leveled against Senator Bilbo in a report filed by Chairman Harley M. Kilgore (D. W. Va.) of the senate war investigation committee. The committee accused Senator Bilbo of using his office for "personal gain" by accepting gifts from Mississippi war contractors whom he helped get government construction jobs.

The committee left it up to the senate to decide Senator Bilbo's right to a seat, but did turn its findings over to Attorney General Tom Clark for "just and proper" action. The justice department revealed earlier it was investigating the case.

The report also was signed by Senators James M. Mead (D. N. Y.), Owen Brewster (R. Me.), Joseph H. Ball (R. Minn.), Homer Ferguson (R. Mich.) and William F. Knowlton (R. Cal.).

Bilbo Is Confident

Senator Bilbo responded quickly to the committee report, issuing a 7000-word statement to defend himself point-by-point against the war contract accusations. He said the report was full of "inaccuracies and misconceptions."

Senator Bilbo later told a reporter he was confident the senate would seat him. "Why," he said, "even if a horse thief was elected by the people of his state, if there was no evidence of fraud, corruption or excess expenditures in the election itself, he couldn't be prevented from taking his seat."

The war investigating senators said in their report that Senator Bilbo probably violated federal laws in accepting $30,000 in political contributions from three war contractors for use in the unsuccessful 1942 senatorial campaign of Wall Doxey, outgoing senate sergeant at arms.

Subterfuge Alleged

The committee said it was convinced "from the testimony and the circumstances" that the $6658.40 worth of real estate improvements given Senator Bilbo by his contractor friends— an artificial lake, a swimming pool, and a paint job on "dream house No. 1"—were "an attempted subterfuge to conceal the donation of funds in payment for service rendered to them by Senator Bilbo."

"The committee is unable to accept the theory that Senator Bilbo's aid to those dealing in government contracts and the benefits he received were unrelated," it said. All told, the committee estimated, Senator Bilbo received gratuities from grateful contractors worth a minimum of $57,000—or a maximum of $88,000.

contributed about $50,000 to the Greater New York Political Action Co-ordination committee and the New York county American labor party campaign committee.

Both committees supported Rep. Vito Marcantonio (A-L. N. Y.) in his successful re-election campaign. The 11 corporations were cited for making contributions to American United for World Government, Inc. None of the firms is nationally known.

The committee's report would be turned over to Attorney General Tom C. Clark "sometime today," it was said. The report was signed by Committee Chairman J. Percy Priest (D. Tenn.) and Reps. Oren Harris (D. Ark.), Carl T. Curtis (R. Neb.), and Frank Fellows (R. Me.).

Imprisonment Possible

The possible penalty if the unions and corporations are convicted is a $5000 fine for an organization and a $1444 fine or one year's imprisonment or both, for any officer for each violation.

The Communist party could be fined $10,000. Its officers, if convicted, could be fined $10,000 or sentenced to two years imprisonment, or both.

Once the committee's report has been turned over to Mr. Clark, it will be up to the justice department to take any further steps. Normal procedure would be for the government to hold its own investigation and then present its findings to a grand jury.

arrangement with local law enforcement officials was possible.

Since all bookies would benefit from "quiet conditions," it was felt all should contribute. Farb paid about half the loss, well-informed sources say, with the rest coming from the out-of-town chance artists, in addition to the other local ones.

The money was paid to the former union official, who is ready to make restitution to the bonding company and thus relieve the "pressure."

Gaming Picture Confusing

The local gambling picture became more and more confusing. One squad of police is reported to have told a prominent Indiana ave. gambler that "we'll have everything fixed up in a few days." Meanwhile, activities were at a standstill.

One "Avenue" gambler, Archie (Joker) Young, was not operating a familiar crap game in a room adjoining a tavern.

Some police expressed fear of indictment under the new prosecutor, Judson L. Stark. His campaign promises carried definite threats to "place behind bars those responsible for lawlessness in our community."

At any rate, no one was anxious to make any move that would expose him, until the scene had cleared.

Police 'Undermanned'

William Remy, safety board president, admitted an "undermanned" police department had handicapped control of gambling.

"When traffic deaths increase, we throw our available men into the breach," the city official explained. "Then, when the cry goes up about gambling, we have to switch the men to that assignment for awhile."

Not only were the big places closed, but county filling stations, poolrooms, patriotic clubs, other social organizations and places known only as "resorts" followed a "closed-door" policy.

City smoke shops, always hard to watch, because of their size and method of operation, were quiet. Pick-and-win tickets, time-honored pools and pinball machines with payoffs all had disappeared.

Detective Chief Kills Lieutenant

Commits Suicide After Using Riot Gun

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Jan. 2 (U. P.).—Authorities believed today that fear of a gambling investigation caused Detective Chief O. N. Martin, 51, to kill Lieut. O. F. Deubler, 31, with a riot gun, then commit suicide. They said his fear was unfounded.

Chief Martin went to police headquarters yesterday and asked Detective Deubler to accompany him to the Lakewood area to investigate a complaint.

Hunter Finds Bodies

An hour and a half later, Grady F. Ratcliff, 27, a jeweler who was hunting rabbits on the holiday, found their bodies on a lonely roadside northeast of the city. They had been dead about an hour.

Dr. Howard Disongh, Pulaski county coroner, said Chief Martin shot Detective Deubler with a police riot gun, then ended his own life with his .45 caliber automatic.

There was no sign of a struggle at the scene of the shooting. Detective Deubler was killed instantly with three blasts from the riot gun which, the coroner said, pierced his back, left side and chest. His service automatic was still in its holster.

The body of Chief Martin was sprawled nearby. He had shot himself through the head.

Friends of Chief Martin said he had been brooding for some time over the possibility of his indictment by the grand jury and had threatened the lives of various county and city officials. They said he feared Detective Deubler would incriminate him.

Walter Guy, foreman of the Pulaski county grand jury, said he personally had reassured Chief Martin a few days ago that he would not be indicted.

Chief Martin was survived by his wife and a daughter, Mrs. O. W. Lechner, Ft. Wayne, Ind. Deubler's widow and 2-year-old daughter reside in Little Rock.
