NATIONAL 24-HOUR FORECAST: A considerable area of the country will experience precipitation tonight and tomorrow morning. Snow showers will fall over northern Arizona and New Mexico, the Lakes region, the Ohio Valley, western Pennsylvania and New York and Northern New England. Snow is expected for Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, the Dakotas, Nebraska, eastern Kansas and Missouri. Rain or snow is pictured for eastern Washington and Oregon, northern Nevada and Utah. Rain will occur along the coast of Washington and Oregon, through central Texas and eastern Oklahoma. (See precipitation areas on Fotocast map.)

Clear skies will be confined to the south and middle Atlantic states and portions of California. Partly cloudy skies will prevail in parts of California, Arizona, Colorado, the Lakes region and along a narrow band extending from southern New England to

Louisiana. (See partly cloudy and cloudy areas map.)

Pressure in the "low" cell in the northeast is the lowest of this season. Southwest storm warnings are displayed from Eastport to Block Island and northwest storm warnings from Block Island to Hatteras. Winds along this coastal area will range from 35 to 45 miles per hour. Small craft warnings will remain displayed from Hatteras to Jacksonville.

Temperatures in the northern and central Plains and the Lakes region will drop as cold air flows into these areas as it moves around the high pressure cell in western Canada. Cold air associated with this high cell will reach northern Florida by tomorrow morning. (Large, open air mass arrows on the Fotocast indicate the direction of this cold air flow.)

The freezing line on the Fotocast passes through points where lowest temperatures will be 32 to morning. It will be still colder north of this line.
