My Day— Reasons Behind Russian Acts Seem Vague

By ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

HYDE PARK, July 10.—Last night I read an article which stressed the fact that the real difficulty in having one world today is the tension between the U. S. and the U. S. S. R. That tension is quite understandable, since we are the two most vigorous and active large nations.

I can quite believe that the U. S. S. R. watches our actions with more interest than she does those of any other large nation because she knows that we are more independent of her.

But I must say that I do not in the least understand some of the actions taken by the Russian government. Sometimes I think that I can see underlying reasons for these actions, but since the U. S. S. R. explains nothing, I can never be sure.

FOR INSTANCE, why does not Russia take part in all the activities of the United Nations? I imagine that one reason is that she finds it hard to find qualified personnel to do so.

Because of the need of using her best people at home in rebuilding the country and advancing the latest five-year plan, she is more concerned in picking people for these activities than in choosing people to serve in the various agencies of the United Nations.

And why does she suddenly come out with statements and plans with apparently no idea of co-operation? It seems to me that this might be explained by the fact that, for a number of years, Russia was cut off from other nations. Therefore now, in taking up these contacts, she does so with suspicion, always wondering what lies behind an offer made by any other nation.

IN REFUSING to join the rest of Europe in making a survey and report on resources, she lays herself open to the accusation that she does not really care so much about European recovery as she does about her power to make the Europeans feel that they have to turn to her for help.

In the old days that would have been an understandable attitude but today she is playing with dynamite, because sometimes when disagreements start growing, you cannot stop them even if you wish to do so.
