THE WEATHER FORECAST
VIEW OF U.S. WEATHER BUREAU, DEPT. OF COMMERCE FORECAST—PERIOD ENDING 7:30 A.M. EST 8-5-47

NATIONAL 24-HOUR FORECAST SUMMARY: After consulting maps, charts and air flow arrows your weatherman has decided warm, sultry weather will grip most of the nation from the Rockies to the Atlantic tonight and early Tuesday. It will be most uncomfortable in the central plains states where minimum temperatures will be in the 80s. Cool air flowing around a high pressure cell in the north Atlantic will force the mercury down into the 60s in northern New England. Minimum readings will be in the 70s from New York to the northern plains, also from the Gulf states to southern New England.

By Tuesday afternoon the mercury is expected to climb to 90 degrees or higher over the entire U. S. except northern New England and the Pacific Northwest where highest readings will be in the 80s.

The scientists tell us air flow will cause the coming heat wave. Weather fans will notice warm, moist air off the Gulf of Mexico is streaming into most of the country from the Rockies to the Atlantic. (See air mass and air flow arrows.) It will be cool in the far west with fog along the California coast as cool air flows around the "Pacific high."

Forecasters are calling for scattered thunderstorms from southern New York to the Ohio Valley and Virginia, also along the Gulf coast, in the Rockies, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Sides will be clear over the Ohio and Tennessee valleys and the central plains. Much of the rest of the U. S. will be partly cloudy. (See hatched areas.)

Minimum temperature forecasts include Boston 66, Cleveland 70,
