Once-Glamorous Film Star Dies in Skid Row Mission

Olive Borden, Penniless and Helpless, Kept Souvenirs of Her Fame With Her Till End

By ALINE MOSBY, United Press Staff Correspondent

LOS ANGELES Oct. 2.—Staring at a picture of herself taken when she was a flashing-eyed star, Olive Borden, silent screen actress, died yesterday at a Skid Row mission. Death came five miles from the glittering Hollywood which forgot her long ago.

Miss Borden tucked the photograph into a dressing table mirror when she was brought to the mission last week. She was ill and helpless, penniless and shabby.

The 40-year-old actress kept one other remembrance of her movie fame. On a table near her narrow bed was a scrapbook. It bulged with clippings about the brunet beauty of 1920's "Half Marriage" and "Love in the Desert."

Miss Borden tucked the photograph into a dressing table mirror when she was brought to the mission last week. She was ill and helpless, penniless and shabby.

Both Olive and her mother, Sibbie Borden, knew well the heights of Hollywood after Olive left a Baltimore convent to find overnight fame in "The Eternal Woman." She became a Wampus baby star. She hired a press agent who is now Jimmy Fidler, the radio commentator.

But the advent of talkies pushed Olive Borden out of the film lights. Her gay, easy-spending life continued.

THREE years ago, her mother came to the Sunshine Mission for help. Olive followed a year later.

The mother progressed from scrubbing floors to managing the mission commissary. Olive tried hard, too. She made beds and washed dishes. But shortly after she donned old finery to act in the mission's pageant play, Olive disappeared from the big, white mission building into the dark streets of Skid Row.

"I GUESS the pageant got her thinking about her old acting days," said Wilfred West, a mission brother.

Mrs. Borden, after a frantic three-month search, found her daughter in a cheap hotel.

The doctor listed the cause of death as "complications."
