Secret of Good Movie Extra Is To Look Like a Nobody—Take It From Kit Carson

By VIRGINIA MACPHERSON, United Press Hollywood Correspondent
HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 2—Kit Carson wouldn't think much of the way a descendant of his earns a living. The kid "dudes up in a dinner jacket and gets paid for having people ignore him."
 He's a Kit Carson, too—aged 34. But where his great, great cousin, "once or twice removed," was a famous pioneer, the modern Kit makes a living because he looks like a nobody.
 "That," he says, "is the secret of being a movie extra. You have to be pleasant looking—but not too much so or you'll stand out. You can't be too tall or too short; too young or too old; you can't even be a type."
 "Blah" is the word Mr. Carson uses to describe the personality of the 300 male extras in Hollywood. But you'd be surprised at the flocks of gents who're willing to admit they look like nobodies. It pays well.

 "I have a $3000 wardrobe," the 20th Century Carson explained. "It earns me $5000 a year."

 It's not his talent, or his manly build, the studios pay for. It's his collection of seven suits, six pairs of shoes, three topcoats, ski outfit, riding habit, tennis and swimming trunks, five sports jackets, six pairs of slacks, one tuxedo, one full dress suit—and one walking stick.
 Directors hire extras by the clothes they have. They must be faultlessly turned out—down to the right kind of lapel for the occasion. Then they get shoved into a scene and told to act like they weren't there.

 "Audiences feel we're there," Kit's kin explained. "But they never really see us. They're concentrating on the guys who're giving the dialogue."
Self-effacing People
 The extras have to be self-effacing people who spend their working lives sipping drinks in night clubs, hurrying down Fifth Avenue, or wearing tails to a society wedding. Between scenes they just sit.
 Off the job they concentrate on brushing and pressing that wardrobe. A dress extra takes care of his clothes like a plumber does his wrenches.

Actress Nancy Kelly Leaves Husband
HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 2 (UP)—Actress Nancy Kelly topped her New Year's resolutions with the announcement today that she and her husband, Fred Jackman Jr., a cameraman, had separated.
 The actress said she wasn't sure yet whether they would be divorced. "I hope things work out, but I'm afraid they won't," she said.
