

Russians Hurl New Charges In Propaganda

British Falsified Denial, Tass Declares

MOSCOW, Feb. 12 (UP)—The Russians struck another blow in the "Battle of Documents" today.

They charged the British foreign office with falsity in denying that it rejected a Soviet request to take part in the examination of captured German papers.

Barely six weeks after the end of the war in Europe, the Soviet government asked for a part in the study of the Nazi documents, the official Tass news agency said in a dispatch datelined London.

After giving its account of the application to join the other Allies, Tass said these facts proved the falsity of a foreign office spokesman's denial Tuesday that it ever turned down such a Soviet proposal.

Release 'Installment'

(A London foreign office spokesman said Tuesday he could find no trace of any indications Russia ever proposed a joint four-power study of captured German documents. The Tass reference apparently was to the same proceedings at the office's daily press conference.)

The Tass report closely followed the release here of the second installment of Russia's counter-blast against the State Department's publication of Nazi-Soviet documents in 1939-41.

Great Britain and France tried to use Adolf Hitler as a tool and by appealing him turn his armies loose on Russia, the statement issued by the Soviet Information Bureau said.

The Tass report from London said the first Soviet installment had thrown "confusion into English official circles." It reported on the Foreign Office spokesman's assertions as evidence of the confusion.

Arranges Whitewash

Russia said in the second installment that the United States, by publishing selected documents from the 1939-1941 German foreign office file, tried to whitewash Britain and France for their appeasement policy.

"As far back as 1937 it became perfectly clear that a big war was being hatched with the direct connivance of Great Britain and France," the Soviet charge said.

The fact that the American government undertook to make the German file public while excluding documents pertaining to the Munich agreement shows that the United States government is interested in whitewashing the heroes of the Munich treachery and in putting the blame on the Soviet Union."

The Russians promised that a new installment in the propaganda war of German documents would be published soon.

Local Merchants Donate $3000 to Remodel Building at New York St. and Indiana Ave.

Boy Scouts of Troop 83 today dedicated their new quarters at New York St. and Indiana Ave., realized with the aid of a $3000 remodeling contribution by Indianapolis merchants and individual supporters.

The troop, organized in 1937, has been homeless since the old St. Paul's Episcopal Church was razed in 1947 at Illinois and New York Sts.

Last year, the Indianapolis Variety Club became the troop's sponsor. Shortly afterward, the two-story building was suggested as a permanent home for the Scouts.

Troop 83 became the only one in the nation meeting in a YMCA, while occupying temporary quarters.

The troop has grown to seven patrols of 10 boys each.

Object of the meeting is to organize a Marion County Volunteer Firemen's Association.

Officials present will outline plans for better organized units and more assistance to volunteer workers. Virgin Hughes, temporary chairman, said an attempt will be made to organize all volunteer fire units on a county basis.

Chief Frank A. Craig, city fire department instructor, and Paul Goss will be in charge of the meeting. Representatives from the State Fire Marshal's office and the Sheriff's office will attend.

Also in attendance will be seven Wayne Township companies, one company from Lawrence, one from Clermont, one from New Bethel, one from Washington Township, and one from Action. The meeting also will be open to representatives from townships interested in setting up volunteer units.

MY FRIEND WAS married at the start of the war to a soldier who was killed. She had a child by him but his father never saw it. She then married a friend of her husband and is very happy and has another child.

Her first husband's parents have decided to bring their son's body here for burial. Should she and her husband send flowers in their name or in the name of the child? Should they both go to the funeral? Should just she and the child go, or should she and the whole family go?

M. J. C.

Your friend need not feel guilty for re-marrying. She should act naturally and attend the funeral with her child, her family and her second husband. Flowers could be sent in her first name and the name of the child.

If friends of her first husband's parents tell you that her present husband's attendance at the funeral will cause hard feelings I suppose he should stay home.

Paging J. O. E.—I have two letters for you.

(I just can't use complete letters from house hunters but I'll include excerpts with initials and forward mail. The letters follow.)

Seek Answer to Housing Problem

I'VE SOLD MY FURNITURE—even my iron—to keep my children but now I'm living with my parents. I love my children and want to find a house in the city where we can live, laugh and enjoy life. My sister will stay with me and help me.

M. S.

MY HUSBAND, 61, and I, 52, have to move and have no place to move. We can't afford to pay over $25 a month. We don't have pets and we don't drink.

MRS. D. W.

WE'RE GOING to be evicted late this month. We have three children and a son coming home from service next December. My husband and I are employed. We'll be happy with anything as long as the family can be together and my boy will have a home to come to.

MRS. C. T.

Ask Mrs. Manners:

Should She Forgive Man Who Lies and Brags?

I'M GOING with a fellow, 24, I love very much. He's wonderful every way but two. He lies all the time and he doesn't have to for I love him no matter what he's done or is going to do. We never argue. I brag him up because I feel that he's not sure of himself.

Besides that, he brags about things he supposedly has done such as drinking and fighting. You'd find him a handsome, friendly and successful businessman.

Maybe you understand human nature better than I. I know why he lies and brags?

You know a LOT about human nature—and you have a big, warm heart. He probably is embroidering the escapades. If you think he's fundamentally sound and that he is not trying to discourage your romance, hang on to him.

Don't be too impressed with the tall tales—he'll stop telling them without an attentive audience.

Deserted Family Seeks Advice

I'M THE MOTHER of five. My husband left us a year ago and we don't know where he is. We aren't divorced but I'd like to be if I had the money. I wish he'd see this letter and come talk it over. How would I file if he contacts me?

The children need their father. If they can't have their own would you advise me to find another for a year?

MRS. E. J.

Whoever files for divorce visits a lawyer and he goes on from there. You might ask the police to help locate your husband and ask Indianapolis Legal Aid Society, Inc., for support details.

Patching up differences, with both of you making improvements, would be easier than finding a new father for five children.

Talks for Lonesome Friend

I KNOW A FINE working lady, nice looking and a good housekeeper, who is worthy of a nice home. She tells me she never will re-marry for she was so disappointed in her marriage that she is afraid of all men. She has a sweet little boy and they are very close.

She says sometimes she thinks she would like someone to go out with but she doesn't think anyone would care for her company with her son around. I asked her to the club on Morris St. but she made fun of me.

How foolishly your friend is acting. She is withdrawing into an inferiority complex and probably showers an abnormal affection on her son because of the love she lacked in her marriage. He will grow up and leave—she'll end lonesome or become a mother over-devoted to her son and a menace to the woman who married him.

She lacks the courage to fight—not for her son's complete attention, which is fleeting, but for abundant living. Let her get good and lonesome—that may bring her around.

Should She Attend Funeral?

MY FRIEND WAS married at the start of the war to a soldier who was killed. She had a child by him but his father never saw it. She then married a friend of her husband and is very happy and has another child.

Her first husband's parents have decided to bring their son's body here for burial. Should she and her husband send flowers in their name or in the name of the child? Should they both go to the funeral? Should just she and the child go, or should she and the whole family go?

I'M A SERVICEMAN'S wife with a six-months-old baby and my husband will be out of service soon. Can't we find a place to live at a reasonable figure, where my baby will be as welcome as I?

HOMELESS.

MY HUSBAND AND I have lived apart for over a year. We want a home and a chance to save our marriage before living apart becomes a habit. We have a 10-year-old son, M. V. P.

I WONDER, IF IT pays to do what's right. We have seven children, have been evicted, my husband's wages are cut to $30, and we've had sickness. We've even thought about letting some of the children be adopted, although it almost kills us even thinking about it.

Sprinkle Gandhi Ashes in Ganges

3 Million Pilgrims Watch Ceremony

ALLAHABAD, Feb. 12—The ashes of Mohandas Gandhi were consigned to the sacred waters of the Ganges and Jamuna Rivers today while 3 million Hindu pilgrims watched amid a shower of rose petals from six planes overhead.

According to the Hindu belief, the ceremony was the last step needed to send the soul of India's sainted leader ascending into the halls of Hindu immortals.

Sprinkle Ashes

Gandhi's son, Ramdas, bent across the rail of a white amphibious duck and slowly sprinkled Gandhi's bones and ashes into the river from the brass urn that brought them to the sacred city of Allahabad.

"I quarreled with Dolores and everybody else. I can't get along with anybody."

"The boy had left high school to work on his father's ranch. He had been going out with Dolores for a year."

"I know he thought a lot of Dolores," her mother said. "I can't be bitter against anyone who cared so much for her."

Police Dunked Hunting 'Big Fish'

Two police officers took an icy dip last night while fishing for a stolen car in the canal near Washington St.

The thief who stole the machine gun at Washington St. and Senate Ave. deliberately drove it toward the canal and jumped free before it hit the water. The car belongs to Betty Brown, 24, of Walcott St.

Police Officers Clinton Rosebrock and Clarence Means set out in a police skiff to fasten tow hooks to the auto. The craft capsized, plunging them into the icy canal.
