Win Scholarships For Business Course

Times State Service
BLOOMINGTON, July 27—Two seniors in Indiana University's school of business have been awarded scholarships to the National Institute for Commercial and Trade Organization Executives Aug. 15-21 at Northwestern University.

Recipients are King R. Traub, 3804 N. Illinois St., Indianapolis, and Warren R. Spangle, Ft. Wayne. Mr. Traub, who will be graduated from the university next month, won the scholarship offered by the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Spangle, president of the IU Collegiate Chamber of Commerce, will receive a scholarship provided by the Indiana State Chamber of Commerce.

Ask Mrs. Manners— Loves Man Deeply But He Ignores Marriage

I'M 18 AND HAVE GONE WITH a man, 22, for two years. I see him nearly every day and he always says he loves me deeply and couldn't live without me, but he doesn't make any headway toward our marriage. I know he loves me deeply and, in return, I love him twice as much. I am happy with him but ever-so unhappy without him.

He has a sound financial background. I have one, too. It couldn't be money standing in the way. Do you think he loves me? If so, why doesn't he do something about our romance? Please help me. I think I will lose my mind eventually.

PEGGY, NORTH SIDE READER.

A man with a job good enough to support a wife would suggest marriage enthusiastically if he loved the girl enough to put her ahead of his freedom and his selfish interests. I'm just sure. Joit him—have some other dates but don't EVER tell him why. Act like you're interested in those other men. If he doesn't start shopping for furniture, start shopping for the right man who will. Have some dates with him and sparkle—he'll wonder who could be making you happy. Hide that cracked heart.

Boy Friend Keeps Her in Tears

THE BOY I love leaves me at home by myself sometimes on week-ends and he does me pretty badly, but I still love him. Mother begs me to leave him alone and my friends don't like him. He says he loves me and doesn't want to hurt me, but he knows he does and keeps me crying. Now we are quit and he says it's his best. His family schemes to break us up and he puts his family ahead of me. He is 20 and I'm 19 and we're the only children in our families.

He acts like he's better than anyone and lies to make himself seem more than he is, but I still love him. He was married awhile back and was hurt. Maybe he hurts me to ease his hurt, but it isn't fair. I've tried going out with other fellows, but I can't forget him and I'm miserable.

JUDY G., A SAD CASE.

Two "only children" don't stand a very good chance in marriage unless they first get over their selfishness. Both of you need to work with a few people and learn to share.

You're probably a kind girl thinking this disappointed boy needs you. He doesn't, you know—he needs someone who'll make him stand on his own feet. Beating you down won't bring him self-confidence. You'll look easy to him and he'll realize he needs harder fields to conquer. You need self-confidence yourself—get it from attentions and kindness of other boys.

You're crying because you want kindness and fair play. You'd never get them from this boy, unless he changed, because he knows you'd settle for less.

Wonders How to Handle 'Other Woman'

IS THERE A WAY I can make this girl my husband sees realize she can't have him and my son and I want him home? Everyone tells me if I would take a drastic step against her she would drop him, as she becomes very nervous when she sees me.

I sued him for divorce for drinking, abusing us, and going with other women. He begged me to dismiss it and said he wasn't running around. I did, and came home two months ago. He never moved back from the hotel, and he runs around in front of me with a girl. I've been patient, not bothering him only to pay bills. He comes to see us like nothing was wrong, but won't move home. I don't want a divorce.

OUT-OF-TOWN READER.

What—talk to the girl and show everyone you're defeated? Oh, no, please don't. There always will be other women to compete. Haven't you a faint idea WHY you've failed? This girl is afraid to interfere with your home, and she feels guilty—but she's drawn to your husband enough that she goes right ahead. A talk wouldn't help.

Be real honest with yourself and dissect your marriage with the Family Service Association or the Intake Department of Juvenile Court. You can talk confidentially at those places—with trained advisers.

'Somebody Started Tales On Me'

I'VE ALWAYS been nice when I've been with boys but someone started tales on me that weren't true. Now I've gone with quite a few boys and they all seem to be after the same thing. I always refuse, so they say dirty things about me. How can I prove to a boy I like real well these things aren't true?

M. J. CITY.

Make him think you'd be surprised if he'd even consider thinking the stories were true. Quit discussing your troubles, keep your head up and choose your friends carefully. Don't hide from people. You're magnifying your trouble—people don't confine their gossip to one person.

Boys have always been "ambitious."

Let Mrs. Manners and readers of the column share your problems and answer your questions. Write in care of The Times, 214 W. Maryland St.

Report Communicators' Jobs Open in Alaska

Jobs in Alaska at starting pay of $3306 a year are open to single men who can qualify as aircraft communicators, the Indiana State Employment Service announced today.

Successful applicants will be assigned to airway communication stations operated by the Civil Aeronautics Administration along Alaskan highways. Eventual promotions might boost the salary to $5656 a year, the Employment Service added.
