Overnight Camping in the Backyard

Overnight camping is always exciting. For the "young fry" one's own backyard can offer the first experience. And even though Billy or Nancy are within call of Mother and Dad, the adventure of sleeping outside with a friend for the first time is most thrilling.

Perhaps the children can cook their supper as a good start to the night's adventure. Mother, and Father or young brothers and sisters and other kids from the neighborhood could be invited to a campfire at which some marshmallows are roasted and a few family favorites sung.

Parents shouldn't worry too much about whether all the sleeping arrangements are perfect. If the homemade tent is likely to leak, one can quickly retreat to the house. If there are not too many hours of sleep, the next afternoon's nap can be a little longer.

Above all, Mom and Pop shouldn't fuss too much about whether things are done just right. It's not a bad idea to make a suggestion or two, but one shouldn't be upset if they aren't accepted. The experience of being uncomfortable will stimulate a little more planning the next time.
